CHAPTER VIII.

JAKEY ENTERS THE ARMY.

The two wayfarers started in the direction the cavalry had taken, but after going a short distance Colonel Maynard reined in his horse.

"Stop a bit, Madge," he said. "I want to consult my staff as to the route." Then to his attendant, "Jakey, I think I know a shorter route than this."

"So do I."

"The one you and I took when we went to Chattanooga before."

"Ter bring back information," added Jakey proudly.

"We'll take it again. It's off the main road, and we'll be less liable to be murdered for our boots."

"Reckon," said Jakey, wrinkling his brow and drawing down the corners of his mouth with an intensely deliberative expression, as though, the problem having been submitted to him, it behooved him to consider it carefully.

They rode back past the house, and keeping on for about a mile turned into a byway. This they followed till they reached the Chattanooga road.

Colonel Maynard was in the most exuberant spirits. He had turned over the command of his brigade for a day or two to the colonel next in rank to himself and was on his way to join his young wife, from whom he had parted a week after his marriage. The two acted on his spirits like champagne. He laughed without having anything to laugh at; he bantered Jakey; he talked lovingly to his favorite horse, Madge. In short, Colonel Maynard appeared just what he was in years, little more than a boy.

His services as a scout had attracted the attention of the army and had led the general for whom he scouted to advance him. He had stepped from the ranks to a high position on the staff, and soon after a cavalry regiment being badly in need of a lieutenant colonel, the colonel being inefficient and some junior officer being needed to practically command, Maynard was placed in the position. When the colonel of the regiment was got rid of, Maynard was made colonel. Soon after his command was attached to a brigade wherein he found himself the ranking regimental commander. This gave him the command of the brigade.

He entered upon his duties with misgivings. He knew he was well fitted for the duties of a scout, but doubted if he could command the respect of 3,000 men. Besides he knew there lurked within him a spirit of antagonism to conventional methods; he feared impulses that might wreck not only himself, but his brigade—perhaps a whole army. True, there was often a kind of illegitimate nobility about these impulses, but it did not render them any the less dangerous.

On hearing the news of his appointment to the command of a brigade he mounted his horse and dashed over to the headquarters of the general to whom he owed nearly all his advancement, with a view to protesting. On arriving there he stammered out reasons which had no coherence and was dismissed by the general with the remark that he was suffering from an attack of ill timed modesty, the general adding, "You are a born soldier, Colonel Maynard, and if the war lasts long enough to give you an opportunity you will reach a much higher command than that of a brigade."

Once on the road he and Jakey had passed before on their journey together to Chattanooga, Maynard took infinite delight in talking over their "campaign," as he called the mission they had pursued. Jakey became more puffed up with pride at having been with the colonel on that occasion than having ridden with him into Tullahoma. Others had been on his staff on the latter occasion, but he, Jake Slack, alone, had been his boon companion, his confidential friend, on his mission to Chattanooga. When Jakey considered this double honor, he felt that he must certainly have been born in uniform and deprived of it by some malignant fairy soon after coming into the world.

The Chattanooga road was by no means deserted. Wagons under guard, couriers, staff officers followed by orderlies, citizens, negroes, indeed all manner of people and vehicles passing between the different corps of the Army of the Cumberland, met them or were passed by them on the way.

"Jakey," said the colonel, "I remember every moment of the time when I came along this road on my way back from Chattanooga. I was traveling, as the dignitaries say, incog."

"Yer mean by thet ef they'd a knowed what a 'portant person y' war they'd a showed ther respec' by hangin y'."

"Exactly. They would have put several feet between mine and the waving summer grass below. You have a forcible way of expressing yourself, but considering that I'm the subject of your remarks my throat feels clearer at my own more delicate drawing of the picture."

"Reckon," said Jakey, with proper solemnity, remembering that the topic was likely to wound the colonel's feelings.

"On that occasion, Jakey, I did not meet even a mule without my heart jumping up into my throat."

"A rope harness must a skeered y' [illegible]"

"Especially when I noticed the knots in it. But seriously, Jakey, that experience has filled me with a peculiar dread. Now, suppose some day a Confederate spy should fall into my hands."

"Reckon yer'd hev lots o' fun hangin him."

"You're far out of the way there, my little Solomon. I fear it would be absolutely impossible for me to do such a duty if required of me."

"Yer needn't take him, in the first place."

"It might be my duty to do so."

"Y' mought do like Tom. Tom, he can't never see me when I want ter drive 'im onten pastur. He can see well nuff when I get an ear o' corn fo' 'im, though."

"A good idea, Jakey. With that subtle sophistry of yours you could reason a Methodist minister into dancing a hornpipe, but I fear it's hardly sound enough to enable one so used to deceiving others as I was when a scout to deceive himself. I should do my best, should I take a spy, to turn him over."

"S'posin 'twar a woman?"

"Oh, Lord, Jakey, don't suppose any such thing. I'd have to do my duty in that case just the same as if she were a man. What kind of a looking 'go-cart' is that coming down the road?"

A horse was visible in the distance, its long neck stretched out in front of its body, coming toward them at a rapid gait. The rattling of a buggy which it dragged reminded the colonel of the band of a newly recruited regiment. Within sat a woman in a striped dress, sunbonnet and glasses. In short, Jakey Slack at once recognized his old friend, Betsy Baggs.

"Howdy, Miss Baggs," he said as she drove by.

Miss Baggs was the sphinx she had been to Jakey when he met her near Tullahoma. She leveled her spectacles at him, but had no recognition whatever for him.

"Who's your friend?" asked Maynard as the buggy rattled away.

"Thet's Miss Baggs," said Jakey.

"And who's Miss Baggs?"

Jakey paused a long while before replying. There was a problem in his mind suggested by the meeting of Miss Baggs so soon after his conversation with the colonel about capturing a woman spy, for Jakey had a suspicion that Miss Baggs was in some way a Confederate emissary.

"Waal," he said at length, "I reckon she's sweet on Rats."

"Jakey," said the colonel, "there is occasionally a lucidity about your explanations, a shining brightness, which makes my eyes blink. But on the present occasion I think there is dust in them. Would you mind giving me a pointer as to your meaning? By Rats do you mean rodents?"

"What's rodents?" asked Jakey.

Meanwhile the rattling of Miss Baggs' buggy was dying away in the distance.

"Real rats are rodents."

"Not them uns. Rats is a corporal in Major Burke's critter company."

"The corporal's name is quite appropriate to the one you have given his regiment. The woman in the buggy looks as if she'd make a fit vivandiere to a 'critter company' and a fit sweetheart for a corporal of the name of Rats."

Jakey made no reply to this. He was evidently weighed down with some concealed responsibility. The colonel tried to draw him again into conversation, but even "their campaigns" were not sufficient. At last the colonel, realizing that they were near their destination and his young wife, became occupied by his own thoughts. Suddenly he caught sight of a large frame house set back from the road. He gazed upon it with a singular mingling of different feelings. In it he had first met his wife, in it she had concealed him from men and hounds, and there she was now, his wife and the mother of their babe. He gave his horse the spurs. Jakey suddenly drew rein.

"Colonel!" he called.

"What?"

"Miss Baggs."

"Confound Miss Baggs! What of her?"

"Reckon thar's somep'n wrong 'bout her."

"What do you mean?"

"Mebbe she's a 'Federte spy."

"You little imp, why didn't you tell me that before?" cried the colonel angrily.

"Waal, I hain't sart'in 'bout it nohow, 'n I thought yer moughtn't like fo' to hold outer a woman."

"Jakey," said the colonel impressively, "you have done very wrong. You should have told me of your suspicions at once. Remember I'm a colonel commanding a brigade in the Union army."

The colonel sat irresolute. What should he do? Miss Baggs was now miles away. Jakey only suspected her. His young wife, whom he had not seen for nearly a year, was within a stone's throw of him. Suddenly he drove the spurs again into his horse's flanks and rode on to the gateway of the plantation. There was no need to open the gate, for there was no gate to open. The two rode on to the house through an avenue of trees, and Colonel Maynard dismounted before his horse reached the foot of the steps leading up on to the veranda. A young woman flew through the open front door with all the impulse of a summer storm. In a moment she and Colonel Maynard were closely locked in each other's arms.

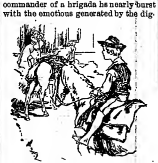
"Mark!"

"Laura!"

Jakey sat on old Tom, viewing this collision very much as he would watch two tempest clouds meet in the sky. "Reckon them uns hez got it bad," he remarked sotto voce and with a solemnity that was intended to be reverential.

Colonel Maynard's brigade went into camp on the river bank some five or six miles from the plantation. The colonel insisted on having Jakey Slack with him permanently and sent him home to ask his father's permission, Jakey at the same time bearing an invitation to his sister to visit Mrs. Maynard, re-enforced by a special request from the colonel that it be accepted. Jakey succeeded in obtaining the desired permission, and after much hesitation Souri decided to accept. Jakey entered the army as a drummer boy, but was not called upon to flourish the sticks. He was at once detailed for duty at brigade headquarters as clerk in the assistant adjutant general's department as a convenient way of making him confidential factotum to the colonel commanding.

Upon getting on the blue and brass of a Union soldier Jakey was very proud of himself, and when placed in close confidential relationship with the commander of a brigade he nearly burst with the emotions generated by the dignity of his position. He was of great use to the colonel, who at once appointed him dispatch bearer between himself and Mrs. Maynard. The domestic nearness of this office only rendered the boy more consequential. He snubbed not only the orderlies attached to the headquarters of the brigade, but would occasionally approach disrespect toward the officers of the staff. As this was largely their fault, for they were continually trying to amuse themselves at Jakey's expense, they bore it good naturedly.



"Reckon them uns hez got it bad."

"Why don't you carry that note like any other messenger," said an aid to him one day, "in your belt?"

"Coz I hain't like any other messenger," retorted Jakey. "D'y' reckon a man what carries the colonel's privato correspenden' air a common orderly?"

As there was no gainsaying his argument without a seeming detriment of the personal dignity of the brigade commander, Jakey held the field.

CHAPTER IX.

CIPHER DISPATCHES.

It was about a week after the arrival of Colonel Maynard at the Fain plantation. He had returned to his headquarters. Laura was sitting at work on some part of the "recruit's" uniform, while the rain from a September storm beat against the window panes. Souri was with her, and as Colonel Maynard was expecting orders to cross the river with his brigade the two had secured Souri's promise to remain at the plantation till the close of the campaign which was about to open. Souri was up stairs administering to the wants of the younger Maynard, to whom she was devoted. He dropped to sleep, and leaving the chamber on tiptoe she descended to the sitting room. As she entered she glanced out of the window.

"Good gracious! If there isn't Miss Baggs!"

They saw through the rain a horse and buggy making a rapid turn through the gateway.

"Who's Miss Baggs?" asked Laura quickly.

"I met her when coming from the north. She got through the Union lines by playing the part of a country girl. I met her again on this side, and she was a lady. She's coming up to the veranda."

Bobby Lee came up the driveway at such a rapid gait as to astonish the two women looking out of the window. The horse had scarcely stopped in front of the house when Miss Baggs, throwing down the reins, rushed up the steps and knocked loudly at the door.

"Go and see what she wants, Souri. You've met her before."

Souri went quickly to the door. When she opened it and Miss Baggs saw the girl she had met between the lines, for a moment her countenance brightened. Then suddenly her expression changed on remembering that Souri was a Union girl.

"I've no time to explain anything. Call some one, quick, to drive my buggy to the barn and hide me."

Now, Souri knew well enough that Miss Baggs was working in the cause of the Confederacy. But she saw a woman in trouble, and this in her eyes obscured all else. She ushered Miss Baggs into the room where Laura sat.

"This girl wishes to rest with us awhile. I'm going to take her horse to the barn."

Without waiting for a reply she went out, and jumping into the buggy drove it around to the barn. There she directed Uncle Daniel, who ruled the stables of the plantation, to put both horse and buggy inside and shut the doors. Having seen this attended to, she went back to the house.

Meanwhile Miss Baggs stood face to face with Laura Maynard.

"This is a Confederate household, I believe," said the fugitive.

"It is."

"Thank God, you are one of ours."

"No."

"What, Federal?" She turned pale.

"No."

"Then for heaven's sake tell me what you are."

"I am a Confederate married to a Union officer."

There were quick successive flashes of hope and fear on Miss Baggs' countenance.

"And you will not give me up?"

"Give you up? What do you mean?"

"I am in the Confederate secret service. I have just been recognized by a Union soldier—a cavalryman. He was not mounted, while I was in my buggy. I heard him cry halt. I gave my horse the whip, and before the man could mount I was away and soon turned behind a wood. There is a fork in the road. I took the left road, leading here. He must have taken the other, which leads nowhere. He will discover his mistake, turn back and take the right road. This is the first house he will pass, and he will surely come in to ask if you have seen me."

"Well?"

"You will not betray me?"

Laura thought of the coming of her husband one night months ago, flying, as this woman was flying, for his life.

"No, rest easy on that score. I will do all I can for you."

There was but little time for action, for the words were scarcely spoken before a cavalryman dashed past on the road. He was throwing mud and water behind him, his boots heavy with moist Tennessee clay. Noticing the house, as Miss Baggs predicted, he drew rein and entered the gateway. Riding up to the veranda, he shouted:

"Hello, there!"

"Get in there, quick," said Laura, pushing the hunted woman into a closet. Then going out onto the veranda she sternly demanded of the man what he wanted.

"Did you see a woman go by here just now in an old farm buggy?"

"No such person has passed."

"Sure?"

"Sure."

"Are you people here Union or Confederate?"

"Both."

"You must excuse me, ma'am, but I think I'll look about for myself a bit."

"You will do no such thing."

"Why not?"

"Because this house is protected by a safeguard."

"That doesn't include rebel emissaries. I shall make a search."

"If you do, you will regret it."

"Why?"

"I shall report you to Colonel Maynard, commanding the —th brigade."

"You have some influence with the colonel, I suppose," said the soldier, puzzled.

"I should have. I'm his wife."

"The devil you are," in an undertone. Then aloud: "Well, ma'am, if you are Colonel Maynard's wife, that ends it. I don't see how a Union colonel's wife can give aid and comfort to a rebel telegraph worker, for that's what the woman is," and lifting his hat he rode away.

Returning to the parlor, Laura found Souri there, just from the barn. The closet door was opened, and Miss Baggs stepped out.

"Is he gone?"

"Yes."

Taking Laura's hand, Miss Baggs covered it with kisses; then turning to Souri she threw her arms about her neck.

Mrs. Fain came into the room, and seeing a stranger drew back.

"Mamma," said Laura, "this lady comes to us much as Mark once came from the other side. She is chased for her life."

"A Confederate?" asked Mrs. Fain.

"A Confederate, heart and hand, body and soul," exclaimed Miss Baggs.

"One sympathizing with our cause is welcome here. Unfortunately my family is broken by diverse sympathies. My husband is exiled on account of his sympathies with the Federal cause. My son is fighting for the Confederacy. My daughter here is the wife of a Federal officer. My own sympathies are all with the south."

"And now," said Laura, "if you will come with me I will get you some dry clothing."

"I will, but first let me know to whom I am indebted for all this kindness. The family name is"—

"Fain."

Miss Baggs controlled an ejaculation of surprise.

"Fain?"

"Fain."

"And you are Laura Fain?"

"I was. I am now Laura Maynard. You seem to at least have heard of me."

"I have heard of you. I am a Virginian. You once visited in Virginia. I was then in Italy studying art."

"And you are"—

There was a brief silence before the guest replied. She seemed deliberating whether to make herself known or not.

"Betsy Baggs," she said at last, and it was evident that if she had another name she would not reveal it.

Supper was announced, after which Miss Baggs asked to be shown to a room where she could rest. A servant was summoned, who led her to the guest chamber, and setting the lamp on a table left her to herself.

When the servant disappeared, Miss Baggs turned the key in the lock and then carefully examined the walls, with a view to discovering if there were openings through which any eye could peer into the room. Her narrow escape, the last of a number of such episodes, had partly unnerved her, and she sat down in a chair to rest, languidly closing her eyes. But not for long. Rising, she drew from the pocket of her dress—every one knows that there is no better place of concealment than a woman's pocket—a small bundle of papers. Spreading them out on the table, she drew her chair near it, and after once more casting her eye about the room began to study them.

Miss Baggs had been endeavoring to secure the information required as to the methods of the general commanding the Army of the Cumberland in following the retreating Confederates ever since the request had been made of her in June previous. Here it was September, and she had effected nothing. True, she had taken a number of dispatches in cipher from the wires, but they were very long, and the longer the messages the more difficult she had found them to decipher. Within a few days she had intercepted two very short ones. Taking them from those before her, she began to study one consisting of only a few lines.

It read as follows:

WASHINGTON, Aug. 5, 1863.

Banks here army the Benjamin cat to for your report shinney daily are advance the cart orders of peremptory applause.

Here is the other, a little longer:

WASHINGTON, Sept. 3, 1863.

Congress long with as advise applause marble your possible your ago to party was connect soon to movements spot his ordered as to Burton pin of and left ordered Benjamin.

Taking up the dispatch she had intercepted when the Army of the Cumberland began to advance and some papers showing that she had been trying to decipher it, she began to look them over. This is the dispatch:

MURFREESBORO, June 28, 1863.

Volunteers Garfield with circling between you possession turn an he cob Bumble at to get that possible by move Benjamin pony chief rapidity around that put of the hours ready shingle to notice enemy's Tullahoma your point the by of polliwog of plateau Niggard if desire and hope forward to haha move mo right I command and mountain order staff.

Miss Baggs had had this dispatch by her since the latter part of June and had puzzled over it for many an hour. She had never succeeded in finding a key, but had at last drawn something of its meaning from the jumbles of words. After much study she assumed that the words, when laid down in their proper order, would give the proper meaning. But there were certain words which either did not mean anything or stood perhaps for some place or general. She began by taking out a number of such words as "polliwog," "haha," "shingle" and "pony." The dispatch was doubtless from Rosecrans, as the word Garfield (his chief of staff) appeared, and the words "chief of staff" were scattered through it. Therefore either Benjamin or Bumble or Niggard meant Rosecrans. Subsequent dispatches which fell into her hands had convinced her that Rosecrans was designated as Benjamin. Then she began to try to fit words together in this wise:

Your command
between Tullahoma and Niggard get possession enemy's right
Circling around the mountain plateau
I desire that you get possession if possible a point between Tullahoma and Niggard
Move with rapidity
By order of Benjamin (Rosecrans) Garfield chief of staff.

Other groupings gave her better results till she obtained the following:

To Bumble (probably a cavalry general on the left flank)—Be ready to move at an hour's notice. I desire that you turn the enemy's right. Move your command if possible by circling around the mountain plateau. Get possession of a point between Tullahoma and Niggard (probably some point in rear of the southern army) with rapidity. By order of Rosecrans, Garfield, chief of staff.

The deciphering, so far as it went, was of no avail, since it did not come in time, but it helped her with the shorter and easier dispatches, which she now attacked. She began with this one:

Banks here army the Benjamin cat to for your report shinney daily are advance the cart orders of peremptory applause.

Miss Baggs had learned that a proper name preceded all these cipher dispatches, possibly having something to do with the key. At any rate, she threw out the first word (Banks) and the words "cat," "shinney" and "cart" as check words. "Benjamin," she assumed, meant Rosecrans. "Applause" must be the signature of the sender, and as the dispatch was from Washington it was probably either Lincoln, Stanton or Halleck. The word "to" taken with "Benjamin" must mean "To Rosecrans," and "peremptory" and "orders" evidently must go together. The word "advance" doubtless explained the two other words. This only left "report" and "daily" as words of importance. These combinations did not come at once, but after getting them she inferred that Rosecrans had peremptory orders to advance and report daily to Washington.

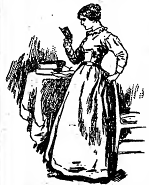
"I have got something at last," she exclaimed, getting up from her chair and walking back and forth excitedly. "This is indeed important."

Then she took up the second dispatch:

Congress long with as advise applause marble you possible your ago to party was connect soon to movements spot his ordered as to Burton pin of and left ordered Benjamin.

Again the words "to" and "Benjamin" were put together, and the words "congress," "marble," "party" and "spot" stricken out as checks. The dispatch, being longer than the other, was more difficult of interpretation. It was some time before the student was satisfied with her efforts. She inferred from it that some one was ordered to connect with some one else. She knew that the Confederate generals feared that Burnside might connect with Rosecrans. So it was probable that Burton meant Burnside, who was at Knoxville, and that he had been ordered to connect with Rosecrans' left "as soon as possible." The remaining words evidently meant, "Burnside also directed to report his movements to you."

"This is no less important than the other," mused Miss Baggs. "It is clear from both that Rosecrans has peremptory orders to advance, and Burnside is ordered to join him. I must get this through the lines at once. From here I must find a way across the Tennessee, just above Chattanooga, if possible, and perhaps I may strike their line connecting with Rosecrans' headquarters at the front and gather in the latest news. 'It never rains but it pours,' and I'll get in all I can get while I'm in luck."



Then she took up the second dispatch.

Collecting her papers, she carefully tied them together and put them in her pocket. Then, turning down the light, she unlocked the door and went down stairs.

For Bicycles.

An ingenious device is for locking the steering gear for bicycles. By a turn of the key, it is stated, the front wheel of the machine can be locked in any position. If the bicycle is left standing at the side of the pavement with the steering gear locked and a thief jumps on to ride off with it, he will soon find himself in difficulties. The locking apparatus is very small. It adds but a few ounces to the weight of the machine, and unless one looked for it specially it would quite escape notice. The construction is said to be simple and cannot get out of order, and it can be made and applied at a small cost.—Invention.

A RETIRED BUSINESS WOMAN.

A Page From Her History.

The important experiences of others are interesting. The following is no exception: "I had been troubled with heart disease 25 years, much of that time very seriously. For five years I was treated by one physician continuously. I was in business, but obliged to retire on account of my health. A physician told my friends that I could not live a month. My feet and limbs were badly swollen, and I was indeed in a serious condition when a gentleman directed my attention to Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure, and said that his sister, who had been afflicted with heart disease, had been cured by the remedy, and was again a strong, healthy woman. I purchased a bottle of the Heart Cure, and in less than an hour after taking the first dose I could feel a decided improvement in the circulation of my blood. When I had taken three doses I could move my ankles, something I had not done for months, and my limbs had been swollen so long that they seemed almost putrified. Before I had taken one bottle of the New Heart Cure the swelling had all gone down, and I was so much better that I did my own work. On my recommendation six others are taking this valuable remedy."—Mrs. Morgan, 569 W. Harrison St., Chicago, Ill.

Senator Ringdahl's bill to create an experimental farm for Polk county should have the hearty support of every Polk county citizen. It would be of great benefit to this new country not only in Polk county but every county in the north part of the state.

Now that Congress has adjourned it will be in order for every crossroads publication to lampoon that defunct body and declare that they did no good thing for the country—but they did do one very good thing for the country——they adjourned.

Help For Consumptives.

Perhaps the founders of the Invalid Aid Society builded better than they knew when, in the year 1892, an association of kind and thoughtful men and women (separating for the sake of pursuing their specific work from another body, the Health Resorts association of Chicago, with which they remain in friendly co-operation) organized to assist by advice and, as far as possible, by money, in the removal of invalids, chiefly consumptives, to regions favorable to their recovery. This society, now incorporated, has already established or verified important data, and its practical experience has gone far toward solving the difficult problems of healthful climate and inexpensive care, while the mere existence of a reliable bureau of information mitigates the cruel uncertainty attending an invalid's change of abode.—From March Review of Reviews.

Crispi's Real Creed in Politics.

Crispi is a man born to rule, if any man is. Of inflexible character, and of uncompromising patriotism, his defects are those of strength, not, as is generally the case with Italian public men, of weakness and irresoluteness, if not of corruption; and to the programme he laid down twenty years ago he is still inflexibly tenacious. As the principal objection raised against Crispi has been his supposed tendency to the assumption of dictatorial powers, the quotation of this programme may serve to show his real creed in politics. It is contained in the program letter of 1865:

Reduction of the bureaucracy of one-third; and to the servants of the state, chosen among the intelligent and honest, a living assured with fair pay, and the future guaranteed against arbitrary dismissal.

Emancipation of the public administration from its dependence upon the executive power, and conferring on the magistracy that authority which it is deprived of by the government, by the system of transfers and conferring of honors.

Transfer of the police to the municipalities.

An income tax on all who reside in the kingdom, according to their possessions, only those being excempted who live by the labor of their hande or brains.

Organization and arming efficiently of the militia, and when Venice is free, its substitution for the standing army, and abolition of the conscription.

Independence of the universities, and assignment of the primary instruction to the provinces and communes, with free and compulsory instruction.

Together with provisions for the extension of the petty banks and means of communiction in the peninsula.

This is for internal affairs. For the reform of the central powers he proposed the following:

Absolute separation of the legislative from the executive, and therefor exclusion of the government employes from the Chambers.

Prohibition of the members of parliament to accept public offices, and ineligibility of all who have taken contracts in which the state is concerned.

A senate elective as in Belgium, and not an emanation of the prince.

The electoral franchise to all Italians of twenty-one who can read and write, and eligibility of all as deputy at twenty-five, and to the senate at thirty, with payment for service, to enlarge the accessibility of citizens to the legislature.—From the March Review of Reviews.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

From our Regular Correspondent.

Washington, Mar. 1, 1895.

Senator Gorman was compelled to withdraw his amendment to the Sundry Civil Appropriation bill, authorizing the secretary of the treasury to issue certificates of indebtedness to meet the deficit in the revenues, because of an agreement among opposing senators to talk away the rest of the session, if he didn't; but before doing so he made a speech in which were some remarkable charges against a Democratic secretary of the treasury, to be made by a Democratic senator. He said that the responses of the secretary of the treasury to inquiries of the senate, as to whether this legislation was needed, were on their face misleading; that there would be a deficit for the fiscal year of $60,000,000 and for the calendar year of $30,000,000, that treasury officials had acknowledged to him (Gorman) personally that there was a mistake of $30,000,000 in Secretary Carlisle's figures of the amount of money now available to meet government indebtedness; that the expenditures have been underestimated by Secretary Carlisle to the extent of $40,000,000, and he added: "The truth is, that they (treasury officials) made a mistake about a year ago in making up their balances of $80,000,000, and they have been trying to adhere to it ever since." Mr. Gorman did not speak with any excitement but with the calm deliberation of a man who had personally gone over the figures of which he spoke, as he said he had; also, that he was somewhat of a book-keeper himself. It is not strange that there should have been excitement on the floor of the senate to such an extent that the services of the sergeant-at-arms had to be called for by Vice-President Stevenson to restore order, something that the oldest habitue of the senate does not remember to have ever before been done. Nor is it strange that men say Secretary Carlisle should be impeached, either for incapacity or for violation of the oath of office.

It seems that whenever some government wants something said to another government that it does not care to say itself it calls on the United States to say it, and if Secretary Gresham has declined a single request of that sort the fact has been successfully kept from the public and buried in the archives of the department of state. So far nothing serious has come of Secretay Gresham's latest attempt to do the parrot act, but the incident is not yet closed. It was the insignificant government of San Domingo that made use of the ever pliant Gresham this time. It seems that in order to force a settlement of a long score against San Domingo France sent three war ships to the harbors of the little black republic. Now this was none of our business, yet Gresham, when requested by the government of San Domingo, told France that no hostile demonstration must be made. The French government took this interference much more good-naturedly than Japan did a similar one, and even went so far as to explain just what it was trying to accomplish. But those war ships were not withdrawn. Gresham then sent another communication to the French government intimating that those war ships would better be withdrawn. There the matter stands at present.

One of Gresham's little schemes was too much even for the Democratic house. He promised to pay the British government $425,000 for damages sustained by Canadian sealers in Bering Sea, but when an attempt was made to appropriate the money the house very properly refused, by a vote of 143 to 112, to do it, fifty Democrats voting with ninety three Republicans against the appropriation. Representative Hitt, of Illinois, led the fight against the appropriation, and it was his showing from the official records, that all the claims for damages which been filed by Canadian sealers aggregate only a little more than one-third of the amount asked for by Gresham, that won the fight.

It has been a long time since the senate was in as excited a condition as it has been all this week, and the nearer the day of final adjournment gets the stronger grows the excitement. Whether all the appropriation bills will be disposed of even by extending Saturday's session through Sunday and Sunday night is still a matter of doubt, although most of the senators believe they will be. But they all admit that in the present temper of the senate some incident comparatively insignificant may upset all plans and end the session in a wrangle, leaving some of the appropriation bills unacted upon. However, the general belief seems to be that the greatest danger lies in possible veto of some appropriation bill during the closing hours, because of some amendment objectionable to Mr. Cleveland.

There is no excitement in the house, which is killing time by debating and passing bill which will never be heard of in the senate, while awaiting for the senate to return the amended appropriation bills, the leaders having decided not to allow action on anything else.

The retirement of Mr. Bissell from the cabinet did not create a ripple, as it had been known for some time that he would go out.

FAIR AND HIS WORKMEN.

The Millionaire Miner's Free and Easy Way of Getting Information.

Senator Fair was rarely known to discharge a miner. A parent could not have been kinder to them. Smoking was forbidden in the mines. Fair had a free and easy way of dropping down the shafts at unexpected hours and making himself agreeable. One night he smelled tobacco smoke in a crosscut. Smiling and paternal, the senator seated himself on a chunk of ore and chatted with his boys. "Dear me," he said presently, "it's really a treat to get down here among yo an away from all the business bothers on the surface. D'ye know, I'd jist like to have a smoke? Do any o' yon chaps happen to have a pipe wi' yon?"

Minor Smith, a new hand, eagerly drew a pipe from a hole in the rock, and his millionaire friend and employer puffed away at the cutty, and when he departed left his blessing behind him.

"Brown," said the senator to the superintendent half an hour later in his office, "discharge that man Smith who's workin in crosscut No. 3 on the 2,400 He's been smokin."

A body of rich ore was struck in a drift, and speculative reasons made it necessary to hide the news from the public for a few days. The senator, in his flannel shirt and oilskin hat, sat down with the resting miners in the drift, and picking a piece of rock from a passing car remarked:

"That's pretty good stuff. Don't you think so, boys?"

There was a murmur of respectful assent from a few.

"What do you think of it, Johnson?"

Miner Johnson, who was acquainted with Fair's ways, examined the rock critically, shook his head and said it looked barren to him. Several others did the same. Miner Murphy, a comparative tenderfoot, saw an opportunity to distinguish himself. "That rock, sir, will go all the way from $150 to $300 a ton."

"Ah," murmured the senator admiringly, "you're a miner, Murphy. You understand your business." Then to the superintendent in the office presently: "Brown, discharge Murphy from that drift. He knows too much."—Chicago Inter Ocean.

The Cost of Powder Puffs.

An English journal warns the London ladies that their powder puffs, those airy necessities of the toilet, are heavy with the blood of slaughtered innocents.

It is stated that as many as 20,000 young swans—cygnets, as they are called—are killed every year to supply this dainty fluff, to say nothing of innumerable young birds of the eider duck and wild goose variety. The bulk of these are imported, the swan and geese from the islands of the Baltic and from Norway and Sweden, and the eiders from the northern and more ice bound seas.

One cygnet will make nearly a dozen average sized "puffs," which show how many women must be, to a greater or less extent, addicted to the use of powder.

The puff trade is highly profitable, as may be judged from the fact that the down of a cygnet costs little more than 25 cents, the poor creature often being plucked alive so that it may bear another crop, while the puffs are sold at from 75 cents upward, nicely mounted in bone and blue or pink satin, which adjuncts amount to comparatively nothing.

The ladies of Paris and Vienna are the largest consumers of puffs, owing chiefly to their fastidiousness in casting aside puffs as soon as they lose their pristine delicacy.

An old and good remedy for nervous headache, which is felt at the base of the brain, is camphor. It is most effective when applied to the part and rubbed for a few minutes.

THE FASHION PLATE.

The information that cashmere will be highly favored will be received with satisfaction by many women.

Perforated fabrics are still extensively used by high class dressmakers and deserve all the popularity they are likely to attain.

Negligee effects will continue to be a feature of both spring and summer gowns on dresses such as teviot suiting, crepon, fayetta, henrietta cloth, camel's hair and the like

The graceful and always becoming "Princess May" waist has still a great number of admirers and will constitute one of the favorite styles for youthful wearers and slender matrons.

For spring tailor gowns that will serve for traveling dresses throughout the summer are stylish English stuffs in canvas and basket effects, woven together very lightly in black, brown or dark blue.

A French skirt model, especially designed for stout women, is gored on the front and sides, and flares only moderately below the knees. It has box plaits in the back and is so shaped that but little interlining is required.

So far as can be judged at present, the spring indications are for quiet, rather neutral tints for round hats, toques and bonnets, leaving the milliner plenty of scope to use brilliant trimmings of flowers, ribbons, spangled garnitures, lace and feathers.—New York Post.

NOVELTIES.

Bonnet brushes are in choice woods and ivory.

Russian silver belts are set with turquoises. Russian belting is sold by the inch.

Butter balls have ceased rise to favor of the two pronged butter fork, an exceedingly pretty butter tool.

Tea bell stands make a pretty accompaniment to the tea table equipage. Richly wrought low shallow bowls with broken edges are used to drop the tea ball in.

George Grossmith's burlesque of the watch bracelet has not made it less popular. He wore one on his ankle and lifted his foot to see the time. One still sees women almost dislocating their wrists to get at their timepieces.—Jewelers' Circular.

The North American Review for March opens with a timely and important symposium in answer to the question "Is An Extra Session Needed?" which is debated by four prominent members of the House of Representatives—namely: Congressmen Tracey of New York, Storer of Ohio, Patterson of Tenn. and Cousins of Iowa.

The blue-bird is hailed as a harbinger of Spring. It is also a reminder that a blood-purifier is needed to prepare the system for the debilitating weather to come. Listen and you will hear the birds singing: "Take Ayer's Sarsaparilla in March, April, May."

The Review of Reviews has interested itself in the movement to revive an appreciation of the services of Rufus Putnam, the Massachusetts Revolutionary hero and Ohio pioneer. This movement has taken definite form in the purchase by an association of the old Putnam house at Rutland, Mass., and the organization of the Quabaug Historical Society at North Brookfield, in that state. The March Review published illustrations of Rufus Putnam's Massachusetts and Ohio homes, and a portrait of Douglas Putnam, who recently died at Marietta, Ohio.

Pioneers of Civilization.

A hundred and four years ago there was born into this world, in a quite country parish of England, one of the souls that become conspicuous as lights to and leaders of men—John Wesley. He was the founder of the religious sect of Methodists, and seldom has any mortal attained such a following as he in less than a century from his birth. In the great West the Methodist preacher has always been abreast of the settlements; in fact he has been a pioneer of civilization, and much more than will ever be written down is due to him for the development of our country. Among these pioneers the preachers of other creeds have not been laggard; and earliest of them all were the Catholic fathers who visited the far Northwest more than a century ago—their names preserved in the names of towns and counties. In the last forty years the great pioneer force of the West has been the rail-road—often not waiting for the woodsman or the farmer, but pushing far ahead of settlement, and making it a possibility. Such a force has been the great Burlington Route civilization, development and prosperity has followed its steps as it crossed the Mississippi, the Missouri, spreads itself over the plains of Nebraska, touching the foot of the Rockies at Denver, penetrated Black Hills, and is in the mountain state (Montana) besides paralleling the Mississippi from St. Louis, to St. Paul. For information about the system, or tickets and maps, apply to your home agent, or write to W. J. C. Kenyon,, St. Paul. Minn.

AYER'S
Cherry Pectoral
SAVED HIS LIFE

So says Mr. T. M. Reed, a highly-respected Merchant of Middletown, Ill., of a Young Man who was supposed to be in Consumption.

"One of my customers, some years ago, had a son who had all the symptoms of consumption. The usual medicines afforded him no relief, and he steadily failed until he was unable to leave his bed. His mother applied to me for some remedy and I recommended Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. The young man took it according to directions, and soon began to improve until he became well and strong."—T. M. Reed, Middletown, Ill.

"Some time ago, I caught a severe cold, my throat and lungs were badly inflamed, and I had a terrible cough. It was supposed that I was a victim of consumption, and my friends had little hope of recovery. But I bought a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, took it, and was entirely cured. No doubt, it saved my life."—I. Jones, Emerts Cove, Tenn.

Mr. Lehman commences this week putting the new steel roofing on the old part of the McKinnon block This experiment will be watched with interest for if the steel roof will stand our climate it will be the roof of the future for all valuable buildings.

Harry Ives went down to St. Paul last week to put in his oar in behalf of the judge, and the Pioneer Press speaks of what "Sheriff Ives of Polk county" has to say. Sheriff Steenerson must have got lost in the shuffle somewhere.

The Daily Times has enlarged to a seven column folio. When Fred Durand went on as city editor we felt sure that something was going to happen—and they were obliged to enlarge the phylacteries of their garments—or bust. Fred has so many locals always.

He wants to rent a farm.

Bill Marin returned from the Steenerson lumber camp on Saturday last with his whiskers fearfully and wonderfully fosted which so changed his personal appearance that a man whom he had never seen before would never have recognized him. While he is not bragging on his good looks he is betting on his good health all right enough.

George Carpenter showed up on Friday morning in all his grace and beauty—and two sticks, one a real old Jax'n hickory from old Lookout mountains in Tennessee, and another a frost-bitten orange stick from the orange groves of Florida, and now he says he'd like to see any dog-goned street car knock him out again. Says he had a grand good time visiting mid southern scenery.

On the impeachment case he said: "I guess the judge is as ready for the trial as are the investigators in the matter and I think he will come out all right. Says he is glad to get back to civilization once more and see some dry land again ready for the seed time. When he left New York last week he says the snow was 'steen feet deep on the level—and nobody knows how deep in the drifts! He reports the natives "enjoying" the worst winter they ever went anywhere—and they do have some pretty tuff ones as we can testify from personal experience. Well, we're sorry for 'em, but can't help it as long as they will persist in staying there, when they could as well come out and enjoy the banana belt with us.

To the surprise of everybody, Alderman I. U. Jennings welcomed a son and heir on Saturday evening last. Mrs. I. U. Jennings was in St, Paul at the time, in attendance at the W. R. C. convention; however the alderman proved equal to the occasion and gave his son Horrie a royal welcome on his return from Tacoma on the evening's train on the Great Northern road. Though surprised, everybody was glad to welcome Horrie back home after his six years stay at the coast. He does not appear to be older than when he went from us, and is the same steady, upright, industrious young man as of yore. The JOURNAL bids him welcome home.

Will Olds managed the calcium light business at the opera house on Tuesday evening and it goes without saying that it was done in a masterly manner—out of sight, as it were—sometimes.

So far this winter has been one of the finest Minnesota ever experienced —and the state is justly celebrated for its fine winters. We have but little extreme cold weather and no bad storms. The prospects for an early spring are excellent.

A. K. Austin returned on Tuesday morning from a visit to Tennessee, Florida and other southern states. Says if he owned Polk county and could trade it for all the country he saw he would not do it. He is satisfied that this country is good enough to live in.

Under the title of "Two Years of Democratic Diplomacy," Senator Cushman K. Davis of Minnesota, contributes a vigorous arraignment of the foreign policy of the present adminstration to the March number of the North America Review:

If you desire to sell your farm and wish to have it advertised in the old countries call in and investigate our facilities for this purpose. For a very small consideration we wil guarantee that many who contemplate coming to America shall see what you have to offer.

Miss E. Veronnean intends to start for Chicago on Saturday evening and upon her return she will give the JOURNAL man an item of interest to our lady readers. She intends to get all of the very latest novelties in millinery and requests her friends to await her return before placing orders for spring millinery.

Mark Twain' comments in the January number of the North American Reviews on Paul Bourget's criticisms of the United States, have called forth a spiritual rejoinder from Max O'Rell who in the March number of the Review takes up the cudgels on behalf of his countryman against the strictures of the American humorist.

Lalla, the charming opera presented at the opera house on Tuesday by home talent, was well attended and a great success both financially and otherwise. The little fairies were charming and the larger fairies were, were—well they were fairies. Everyone seemed to enjoy the entertment hugely.

The House judiciary committee held a meeting on Tuesday and decided to commence the examination of witnesses on Wednesday of next week. Over 100 witnesses will be summoned to be and appear before that tribunal to record all they know in the case. Whether the case will ever reach the senate is an open question.

Bishop Cyrus D. Foss, of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Philadelphia contributes a paper on "The Old Pulpit and the New," to the March number of the North American Review, it being in the nature of a commentary on the artical entitled "The New Pulpit," by the Rev. H. R. Howels, which appeared in the Februrary number of that periodical.

C. H. Saake returned from Iowa on Monday evening with twelve as fine horses as were ever brought to Polk county which he will be pleased to show to any of his farmer friends who are in need of a good team. The JOURNAL last week announced that he had traded his Parnell farm for horses and would soon leave for Iowa to get them and he did so on Thursday evening. He has a fine lot of good servicable horses and mares that he is prepared to sell on the prevailing prices. Call and see them at the old Central house barn.

Louis Fontaine was out to his farm last week to look after some hogs that had been butchered and were waiting the completion of his cold storage packing house to be properly cured. As the house was not quite ready for business, owing to the illness of the foreman, Mr. Fontain feared that the mild weather would spoil his pork so he brought it down for Mr. Stanton to cure. He tells the JOURNAL that notwithstanding all the extra expense incurred in this matter the venture will be a profitable one, and would have been far more so if his plans had not miscarried. While he does not make big money out of it yet with all the extra expenses there is a profit.

The action of Lee W. Squiers in commenting upon the impeachment case on Sunday evening and then calling for a vote upon the question has been one of the topics most generally discussed during the week and many are the comments both favorable and otherwise that have passed. We did not hear the remarks of Mr. Squiers, but we know him to be a very level-headed man, very much in earnest in his work and we can see no good reason why the pulpit is too sacred a place in which to preach against sin or to uphold those who are waging a warfare against sin. From the Rev. gentleman's standpoint Judge Ives has been managing a crusade against some of the greatest sins of the present day and so believing it was perfectly proper for Mr. Squiers to commend the judge. As we understand the matter what he took the rising vote for was to ascertain in that way how many endorsed the judge's action. If that was the reason we can see no harm in that either. It is hardly to be supposed that people who know nothing experimentally of church work would be pleased with all they see and hear there. If gambling is a sin it is the province of the church to war against it.

The Arctic Ocean.

Lieutenant Colonel Sabins has noticed a striking resemblance in the topographical configuration of the northern coasts of America and Asia, the similitude beginning at Bering strait, whence a similar coast line is preserved, each having also an attendant group of islands, between which there is much similarity. These are the Parry islands pertaining to the first mentioned continent and the New Liberian group belonging to the latter. Even as to latitude these islands preserve a resemblance.

But what of the great interior of this polar ocean? This is all unknown. An opinion may be deduced from a careful inspection of a chart of the earth that this ocean has islands, and the fact that fowl are seen to penetrate toward the interior in great numbers is explainable on the hypothesis that they there find subsistence to invite them. On the other hand, they may fly directly across the polar area to similar parallels on the opposite side, and the fact that with the coming of the polar winter they come from the polar district is evidence that the subsistence, if there be any, is not so abundant as to tempt them to remain. Again, only the nocturnal tribes would or could endure the long polar night, and even if there were polar islands bearing abundant subsistence common instinct and experience might impel all the day fowls to leave.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Russian Proverbs.

The czar occupies a prominent part in Russian proverbial locutions. Many of these remind us of similar sayings current in western Europe. We give here some of the most original specimens: "The crown does not preserve the czar from headache." "Even a leprous czar is pronounced healthy." "Even the dead body of the czar decays if it is not embalmed." "The voice of the czar finds an echo, even though there be no mountains near." "A teardrop in the czar's eye costs the country a good many pocket handkerchiefs." "When the czar writes verses, woe to the poets!" "What the czar fails to achieve, time will bring to pass." "Even the czar's cows bring forth nothing but calves." "When the czar has the smallpox, the country carries the marks of the disease." "If the czar presents you with an egg, he demands a fowl in return."—Kreuz-Zeitung.

THE NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW is recognized on both sides of the Atlantic as the foremost Review in the English language, and no expenditure is spared in maintaining it in its unrivalled position.

The REVIEW is the mouthpiece of the men and women who know most about the great topics on which Americans require and desire to be informed from month to month. Its list of contributors forms a roll of the representative men and women of the age.

Subjects that concern the interests of receive constant and special attention. Among topics recently discussed are:

"Woman Suffrage in Practice"; "The Renaissance of Woman"; "Woman in Politics"; "The New Aspect of the Woman Question" and "The Modern Girl," by the author of "The Heavenly Twins"; "The Future of Marriage"; "Evils of Early Marriages"; "The Servant Girl of the Future"; "The Financial Depedence of Women"; "Trades Unions for Women"; "The Lack of Good Servants"; "American Life and Physical Deteriorlation"; "Good and Bad Mothers"; "The Tyranny of the Kitchen"; "The Amateur Nurse"; Mark Twain's Defense of Harriet Shelley, etc., etc.

A New Feature for 1895.

The REVIEW will publish in 12 chapters, beginning with the January number, the

a historical work of unsurpassed importance, which will throw a flood of light upon the chequered career of Napoleon III, and the influences which led to the collapse of his Empire in the gigantic struggle with united Germany, under Wilhelm I, and his Iron Chancellor. It is as fascinating as a romance, being richly anecdotal and full of information drawn from sources hitherto inaccessible, presented in the graphic and vivacious style which "The Englishman in Paris," by the same author, has made familiar to thousands of our readers.

SCOUT SHAVE HEAD.

AN INDIAN DUEL AT THE STANDING ROCK AGENCY.

It Grew Out of a Quarrel Over a Quarter of Beef—Crooked Neck Made a Bluff and Was Called Down—Rifles at Thirty Yards and Fight to a Finish.

"A duel which I witnessed in 1876 at Standing Rock agency, Dakota," said an old scout, "between Scout Shave Head and Chief Crooked Neck of the Hunkpapa Sioux was a performance that would have called for applause from the most critical audience that ever witnessed a Spanish bull fight. Shave Head, it will be remembered, was one of the Indian police who was killed while attempting the arrest of Sitting Bull in the fall of 1890. In 1876 I was interpreter and chief of scouts at Fort Yates, near Standing Rock agency, where I had 30 Sioux Indian scouts under my command, who were selected from the friendly bands and quartered at the military post with their families. The military authorities issued rations only to the scouts, while their families drew from the Indian agent. The beef was slaughtered on the east bank of the river, the Indians crossing in boats.

"I usually accompanied the scouts when they went for their beef. About 150 Texas steers were killed every two weeks. These were parceled out to the several bands, beginning with the larger, who would receive 12 or 15 head as their share, the next 10 or 12, and so on to the smaller bands, who would get two or three, according to their number. Lastly, single families, not members of bands, were given beef by themselves, one steer to four families, or a quarter to each. The scouts, half breeds and squaw men were among this number. The trouble which terminated in the duel between Shave Head and Crooked Neck began over the issue of beef.

"Shave Head, Crooked Neck, Charley Pappau, a half breed, and the Widow McCarty, a squaw who had been married to a white man, were given a quarter each in the last beef issued. Shave Head, Pappan and the widow immediately began skinning the beef, when Crooked Neck approached the scout, and placing his hand on his shoulder pushed him violently aside, saying: 'You belong to the soldiers. You have no right here. Go to the fort for your beef.'

"I stood not more than 50 feet away. Shave Head cast one look of defiance at his assailant and then came to me and said, pointing at Crooked Neck: 'That man has driven me away from my beef. If I was not under your command, I would know what to do, but now I await your orders. If you leave me free to act, he is not man enough to keep me away from my beef.'

"I answered that since the agent had given him a quarter of that beef it was therefore his, and he had a perfect right to take it.

"'Then,' said he, 'tell that man to keep away from me.' I answered that Crooked Neck did not belong to my company, and I had no authority over him.

"'Very well,' said the scout. 'I shall take my beef,' and rejoining the others he again offered to assist in dressing the beef, only to be again thrust away by Crooked Neck. This time he gave utterance to that savage growl which, once heard, can never be forgotten, and climbing out of the slaughter pen on the north side, and taking his rifle from his wife, he turned to the left, coming out on that side of the corral facing the river. Crooked Neck, seizing his rifle, went out of the corral on the south side, and turning to the right the two combatants met face to face on the west side of the corral. Between them was the agency wagon, which was backed up to the fence to receive the beef. The first shot was fired by Chief Crooked Neck over the rear end of the wagon. The driver, supposing that he was the object of attack, frantically whipped up his mules, leaving a clear field between the two enraged warriors, who were not more than ten yards apart. Talk about an Indian war dance! Here was executed a dance that surpassed anything of the kind I ever saw. Shave Head was the more agile of the two, jumping from side to side, rearing high in the air and again bending low down to the ground, all the time keeping his eye fixed on his foe and his gun ready for use. The corral had been surrounded by not less than 1,000 Indians, men, women and children, but when the firing began they had surged to one side, leaving the space in the rear of each combatant clear.

"The second shot was again fired by Crooked Neck, but he again missed his mark, and during the instant required by him to throw another cartridge into his piece Shave Head, who was still as a statue, took aim and fired. The ball struck Crooked Neck in the hip, which crippled him so that he had but one leg to dance on. As soon as Shave Head fired he resumed his dancing, keeping it up until his antagonist fired again, when he repeated his former tactics, pausing in his dance while he took aim and fired. This time he brought Crooked Neck down with a bullet through his breast. He fell forward on his face, his gun under him. His friends pressed forward, holding up their hands and calling upon the scout to desist. He had killed his man.

"But Shave Head was determined to make it a sure thing. First pointing his gun toward the crowd to warn them back, he advanced to the prostrate Indian, and holding the muzzle of his gun within two feet of his victim fired three shots into his head. He then resumed his dancing, and facing the crowd he moved backward to the river, and leaping into a boat was rowed to the west side, where I found him later away out on the prairie performing the Indian rite for purification after shedding blood."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

"A Trip On the North-Western Limited between the Twin Cities and Chicago is like rolling in a King's Palace over two smooth rails. If the traveling public of thirty years ago had been told of the beauties and comforts of this fine train the story would have been thought a fairy tale. But it is all a reality now and the wonder is what new comfort or luxury will come in the future. Whatever it is, it will surely be found on The North-Western Line long before other lines think to adopt it.—The Press, Osceola, Wis.

QUEER FREAKS OF NATURE.

Occasions When the Sun Became a Black and Deadened Orb.

The ancient historians mention several instances of the sun "going out" or failing to shine and give forth its usual amount of heat and light for periods of time varying in length from three hours to several months. According to Plutarch, the year 44 B. C. was one in which the sun was "weak and pale" for a period approximating 11 months.

The Portuguese historians record "several months of diminished sunlight" in the year 934 A. D., and, according to Humboldt, this uncanny period ended with "strange and startling sky phenomena, such as loud atmospheric explosions, rifts in the vaulted canopy of blue above and in divers other rare and unaccountable freaks." In the year 1091, on Sept. 29 (see Humboldt's "Cosmos"), the sun turned suddenly black and remained so for three hours and did not regain its normal condition for several days. According to the noted Helmuth's "Solar Energy," the days of seeming inactivity on the part of the sun, the days following the sudden blackening of the great orb, were noted for a peculiar greenish tinge and are marked in old Spanish, French and Italian records as "the days of the green sun." February, 1100 A. D., is noted in the annals of marvelous phenomena as a month in which there were several days that "the sun appeared dead and black, like a great circular cinder floating in the sky."

"On the last day of February, 1206," says Corteza, an old Spanish writer on astronomy, astrology and kindred subjects, "the sun appeared to suddenly go out, causing a darkness over the country for about six hours." In 1241 the European countries experienced another siege of supernatural darkness, which the superstitious writers of that time attributed to God's displeasure over the result of the great battle of Liegnitz.—St. Louis Republic.

BOTH FOOD AND POISON.

The Wonderful Qualities of the Cassava Plant of Brazil.

Among the plants which supply food for man a foremost place must be given to the cassava or manioc plant, from which Rio tapioca is prepared, being a native of Rio de Janeiro and the warm provinces of Santa Catherina, Brazil, South America, where they employ improved machinery for preparing it, making it worth 18 cents per pound in the latter province.

The height to which the cassava plant attains varies from 4 to 6 feet. It rises by a slender, woody, knotted stalk, furnished with alternate palmated leaves, and springs from a tough, branched woody root, the tender collateral fibers of which swell into farinaceous parsnip-like tubers, brown externally and of great size, sometimes weighing 30 pounds.

The rind being removed, the tubers are reduced to a pulp by rasping or by holding them against a wheel or grindstone. The pulp is washed with water, pressed and baked upon iron plates and now becomes Rio tapioca, while the starch floats off in the water, in which form it is imported under the name of Brazilian arrowroot.

Life and death are strangely blended in the cassava root. The juice is a rapidly destroying poison, the meal a nutritious and agreeable food. The poisonous juice of the tubers is removed by heat or washing, but if the recently extracted juice be drunk by cattle they soon die in convulsions. If it is boiled with meat and seasoned, it forms a wholesome and very nutritious soup. In Jamaica they make use of it to preserve the meat, game, poultry, etc., that are left after meals in what is known as the pepper pot, one family having kept a pot in use for this purpose for over 20 years.—Epicure.

According to the old church canons, the Christmas festival lasted from Christmas eve to Feb. 1, by which date all the decoration must be removed from the churches.

A Wonderful Machine.

A conception of the ingenuity involved in the construction of some of the finer tools now employed in various manufactures may be obtained from the following fact:

A machine for turning out watch screws was recently exhibited at the Institution of Mechanical Engineers in London which was so complicated that several skilled engineers present confessed that they were unable to follow the train of mechanism, even when it was explained by the aid of working drawings!

Yet this machine, when a wire is fed to it, goes on doing its work, turning out perfect screws, and as long as the wire lasts it requires no interference by its human attendants.—Youth's Companion.

Some of the Patents Affected.

Among the patents affected are three issued to the Western Union Telegraph company on applications filed by Thomas A. Edison, as follows:

Patent 474,230, application filed April 27, 1877. No. 474,231, and 474,232, application filed July 27, 1877. On March 7, 1893, patent 492,789 was issued to the same party on an application filed by the same party on Sept. 5, 1877. These inventions became the property of the American Bell Telephone company by the telephone consolidation contract Nov. 1, 1879. These Edison patents are claimed to be fundamental, and they with the Berliner patent, now in litigation, and which remained in the patent office from 1877 to November, 1891, expire at the date of the expiration of the foreign patents. The inventions have been in use since 1878. The Edison inventions were patented abroad in England, France, and Canada in 1877, in Belgium, Austria-Hungary, Italy, Germany and Spain in 1868 and in Prussia in 1882. They are free in foreign countries and under the construction now given of section 4887 are made free in this country.

Substantially the decision will effect in the same way the quadruplex telegraph patents which were applied for in October, 1874, and issued Dec. 15, 1885. The incandescent lamp patents filed by the General Electric company are also included in those which will be affected by the decision.

VOWELS AND CONSONANTS.

A Close Look Into the Way They Are Formed and Used.

A. Mellville Bell of Washington, in his note on "Syllabic Consonants," read at the second session of the American Oriental society in this city, said:

"What is is a vowel? What is a consonant? What is a syllable?

"A vowel is defined as a nonfrictional emission of the voice or of unvocalized breath through an oral channel, with momentarily fixed configuration. Vowels therefore run smoothly into one another by merely altering the shape of the oral passage without interrupting it.

"A consonant is defined as an interception of the breath or voice by oral stoppage, or by emission through side channels or through narrow chinks. The change from one consonant to another thus involves a motion of the articulating organs, producing, with more or less audibility, a puff, a flap or a sibilation.

"The two classes of elements meet in ee, y, oo, w. A syllable is any vocal element uttered with a single impulse of voice. All the vocal elements in a syllable must be clustered together without admixture with nonvocals, but any number of nonvocals may precede or follow the vocal cluster without affecting the syllabic unity.

"The consonants l, m, n, when they are final after consonants, frequently form syllables without vowels, as in bottle.

"The test of good pronunciation is to give each syllable its own distinct sound, so that in the most rapid utterance the ear can trace the boundaries of every syllable. But the syllable sounds must be true to customary pronunciation.

"The name consonant, if held to imply an element that cannot be pronounced without a sonant or vowel, would be a misnomer, and its use should in that case be discontinued in scientific menology. Vowels are the soft and plastic substance of speech. Consonants are the articulations or joints on which vowels and syllables turn. Their proper name is, therefore, 'articulations,' not consonants.

"Phonetic elements make syllables. Syllables make words. Words are to be considered as the syllables of clauses. Clauses must be carefully individualized, for they are the syllables of sentences. Divide your sentences into their logical units or clauses, and indicate within the clauses all their phonetic units or syllables, and you will fulfill the grand fundamental precepts of delivery."—Philadelphia Record.

STATE LEGISLATURE

TWENTY-NINTH BIENNIAL SESSION

Tuesday, Feb. 20.

SENATE.—On motion of Senator Young, S. F. 272 was taken from general orders and given its final passage. It is the usual seed grain loan bill to aid farmers whose crops were destroyed by hail or storms in 1894.

When the senate reached general orders and went into committee of the whole, Senator Schaller was invited to preside.

The bill establishing a normal school at Duluth met with serious opposition. It calls for no appropriation at the present time. Stevens of St. Paul and Yale of Winona supported the bill and it was finally recommended to pass.

HOUSE.—The session of the house was brief and unimportant, very little business being transacted.

A memorial to congress was passed asking that the Olney arbitration bill, or some other equally good arbitration bill, be made a law. The vote was 78 to 3.

Wednesday, Feb. 27.

The legislature enjoyed another half holiday Wednesday. Both houses last week received an invitation from the regents to visit and inspect the university, and a large majority of the members of both houses came up on special cars from the Capital City. The party was in charge of Mr. Dingman of the joint committee on the university, and arriving at the institution about 10 o'clock, was shown around the various buildings for an hour and a half, placed on exhibition in the chapel before an admiring audience of intellectual young men and women for another hour and a half, hastily fed and then shipped back to St. Paul in time for the afternoon session at 3 o'clock.

After returning from the university both house held brief sessions, but aside from the introduction of bills and resolutions little was done.

Thursday, Feb. 28.

HOUSE.—The sensation of the session was sprung in the house during the morning when Representative Feig presented a petition from citizens and attorneys of Crookston, asking the impeachment and removal from the bench of Frank Ives, judge of the Fourteenth judicial district. In general, Judge Ives is charged with intoxication, partiality, lack of legal knowledge, with being arbitrary and with degrading the high position he holds by using it as a partisan position to punish his enemies and reward his Populist friends. There are 21 specific charges of the most serious character, and when he presented the petition to the house, Speaker Pro Tem Staples asked that the members give it close attention. The matter was referred to the judiciary committee for investigation.

SENATE.—The senate killed the Duluth normal school bill, and passed the bills relating to drainage of wet lands; the Gibbs resolution to congress asking that the old Fort Snelling buildings be ceded to the state; to prohibit the aiming of firearms at a human being and the Schurmeier bill, proposing an amendment to sec. 1, art. 7, of the constitution, relative to the election franchise.

The capitol bill introduced by the Ramsey county delegation was made the special order for 2:30 Thursday afternoon.

Friday, March 1.

SENATE—The census enumeration was the subject of considerable debate at the afternoon session of the senate. It was finally decided that all statistics be left out.

The senate and house passed a joint resolution recommending General Mason as a soldier worthy of promotion to the full rank of brigadier general. In the house the resolution was passed by a rising vote.

At 11 o'clock the senate and house went into executive session to formally receive the portrait of General Thomas, presented by the State Veterans' association. Commander-in-Chief Lawler was present and delivered an address.

HOUSE—Senator Stockton's bill appropriating $3,500 for building purposes at the Fairbault institute for defectives was passed under suspension of the rules.

Mr. McGrath's bill appropriating $100,000 to open closed waterways in the northern part of the state passed, but the amount was reduced to $50,000.

Representative Bravig introduced a resolution looking to the impeachment of Governor Clough and Bank Examiner Kenyon. It was referred in the usual way.

Saturday, March 2.

HOUSE—The house declines to investigate the world's fair commissioners by indefinitely postponing Mr. Dressel's resolution to that effect. Many members had gone home and there was a thin house, so the calendar was not taken up. Fifteen new bills were introduced during the morning session.

A resolution congratulating the people of the United States on the adjournment of the Fifty-third congress was introduced by Mr. Downs. A motion to lay on the table was lost and the resolution was then adopted.

Among the bills acted on in committee of the whole were the following:

H. F. 287—To amend sec. 1, chap. 33, laws of 1893, relating to legal newspapers. Progress.

S. F. 274—Relating to divorce. To be indefinitely postponed.

H. F. 353—To regulate the sale of intoxicating liquors. To pass.

H. F. 285—To authorize county surveyors to restore posts, etc., marking boundary lines, and making each prima facie evidence. To pass as amended.

S. F. 18—Relating to the incorporation of villages. To pass.

H. F. 136—To prevent drunkenness and insanity resulting therefrom. To be referred to the judiciary committee.

H. F. 371—An act to amend sec. 156 of the penal code, to abolish the death penalty for murder in the first degree. Progress.

SENATE—Not in session.

Monday, March 4.

HOUSE—There was barely a quorum in the house. The Warner bill to appoint a state mineral land agent was considered in committee of the whole. It was finally recommitted to a special committee.

The Zier bill to abolish capital punishment was indefinitely postponed.

Littleton's bill to revise statutes was favorably recommended, as was also Feig's bill for a state entomologist.

Other bills passed were:

H. F. 4—Relating to town insurance companies. Passed.

H. F. 130—To regulate the employment of children. Passed.

H. F. 332—To fix time of holding terms of the district court in the county of Roseau, Fourteenth judicial district. Passed.

H. F. 285—Relating to roads. Passed.

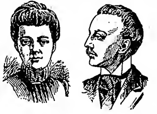
A COUNTESS NOW.

Miss Anna Gould, Worth $15,000,000, Weds a French Nobleman.

NEW YORK, March 4.—At noon, under a canopy of royal purple, Miss Anna Gould was wedded to Count Paul Ernest Boniface de Castellane. The ceremony was performed in the East Indian room of the Gould mansion, which had been converted into a veritable garden of beauty. The wedding procession formed in the library just above the Oriental room and from there passed through the great hall, hung with garlands of asparagus vine, entwining lilies of the valley and white roses.



ANNA GOULD. COUNT CASTELLANE.

The ceremony was performed by Archbishop Corrigan, but was abridged by the fact that the bride has not, as it has been frequently stated, surrendered her own religious faith.

The bridal party formed as follows:

First came the ushers, Prince del Drago, Raoul Duval, Brockholst Cutting and Howard Gould. Following them were Miss Anna Gould, with her brother, George J. Gould. The little pages, Masters Kingdon and Jay Gould, bore the bride's train, and the bridesmaids, the Misses Helen Gould, Beatrice Richardson, Catherine Cameron and Adelaide Montgomery followed.

While the arrangements for the wedding had been on a magnificent scale, the number of invitations issued was small, only relatives and intimate friends having been so honored.

Wealth and Aristocracy.

Miss Anna Gould is 21 years of age and has been in society but a short time. She was educated in Boston and shortly after leaving school went to Paris on a pleasure trip. Here she met her present husband. She possesses a fortune of $15,000,000.

Count Castellane is 27 years of age and a member of one of the first families of France, its patents dating back to the year 1000. The count's great grandfather was Marshal de Castellane, a famous soldier during the first empire, and his father was a Monarchist deputy in 1871 and has since become a well known writer on French history. The family estates are valued at 7,000,000 francs. Count and Countess Castellane will leave for Europe at once.

FOSSTON ITEMS

(From the Thirteen Towns.)

R. H. Carr, of Bemidji, was in town this week, the first time he has been here this winter, owning to ill health.

J. E. Flesch and family were "surprised" the other evening by a number of friends, consisting of several sleigh loads, from the town. They report having had a most enjoyable time.

Geo. Chew, Jim Pullman and several others, with a number of teams, left for McNair's camps on Wednesday to assist in finishing the logging there, provides more snow comes and brings sleighing with it.

John Chapman, a well known and hitherto respected resident of Columbia, has left home, taken to the reservation, and with a shot gun dares anyone to come near him. It is reported that he is guilty of a most atrocious crime and that he is endeavoring to get out of reach.

Sam Sibley, a well known enterprising farmer on White Earth reserve, sold 70 dressed hogs here a few days since and still has about 150 left. In conversation, Mr. Sibley states that while there are no prices, they are yet better than wheat as money-getters.

Fred Turpin was unpleasantly surprised last week by a U. S. marshal who informed him that he was required to answer to the charge of disposing of liquor to an Indian on the White Earth reservation. He accompanied the marshal to Crookston Saturday and on Monday appeared before Judge Christianson. However, as the charge was apparently a trumped up affair and there was no evidence against him, Fred was quickly dismissed and returned home on Tuesday.

McIntosh Items.

[From The Tribune.]

C. A. Hitchcock, J. P. Johnson, and C. F. Page, were at the capital the last of the week, arriving home Saturday.

Mr. M. I. Rlagdal representing the Marble Works of John O. Sundet & Co., Crookston, is in town this week selling monuments.

Mrs. Peterson, daughter of Mr. and Mr. John King, Sr., returned to her home at Verndale Thursday, after having visited her parents and relatives near McIntosh.

Thief River Falls Items.

[From the Press.]

A party consisting of C. Kretzschmar, H. O. Hanson, C. A. Robbecke and Philip Zeh departed Monday last for a ten day's trip to the Lake of the Woods and vicinity.

The exhibition given by the schools was greeted with a crowed house and each number was heartily received. The sum of $10.00 was realized which will be appropriated towards an organ for the school room.

Latest report from Jos. McLaughlin, the young man who met with misfortune here some time ago by having his feet badly frozen, are to the effect that he is still at the hospital at Grand Forks and is getting along splendidly. He can now walk around some and expects to be out in a week or two.

E. D. Childs, of Crookston, was in the city Monday looking after his farming interests in this neighborhood. Mr. Child is greatly interested in dairy matters and is arranging for a large dairy meeting in Crookston very soon. Announcements will be made in these columns later.

Goodwin Leppert, wife and child, formerly of this city, now of Devils Lake, are here on a visit to old friends and relatives.

My Wife Is Nervous

Says many a man and too often he is inclined to blame the poor, tired woman who cannot eat or sleep, whose whole life is filled with misery because her blood has become impoverished and her nervous system exhausted. She needs a building up medicine like Hood's Sarsaparilla. A few bottles will enrich and vitalize her blood, tone and strengthen her digestive organs, give her a good appetite, enable her to sleep soundly, banish her nervousness and bring back her smiles. Mr. J. W. Roberson, of Greenfield, Tenn., says: "My wife began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla about three months ago and she is now taking her third bottle. She has been in poor health for fifteen years. Hood's Sarsaparilla is doing her more good than any other medicine she has ever taken. Her appetite is better, she looks better and there has been improvement in every way."

ENDED IN A RIOT.

Indiana Legislature Winds Up the Session With a Disgraceful Fight.

MANY MEMBERS ARE INJURED.

Doors Battered Down, Desks Broken and Pandemonium Reigned.

INDIANAPOLIS, March 12.—The legislature broke up in a wild riot, in which almost every member participated. Revolvers were drawn and many persons were seriously injured, Adams of Park county perhaps fatally.

For fully 20 minutes the state house was filled with a howling, surging mob. Men who had been friends and sat side by side during the session became deadly enemies and made every effort to injure each other. Myron King, Governor Matthews' private secretary, was locked in the elevator and a big, burly man guarded the door and refused to allow him to leave. The police and the secretary was released. When he arrived at the door of the house at 11:15 he found it locked. He had an important message from the governor and a great deal depended upon its delivery to the house before 12 o'clock. He pounded on the door but was denied admission. He cried that the door was locked and requested that it be opened as he had a message from the governor. His voice was heard by a number of Democrats who were in the corridors, and they ran to his assistance. An attempt was made to force open the doors, but the crowd of Republicans who were keeping the governor's secretary out with his message resisted with all the force they could command. The doors were brought to bear upon them and they were forced open. King, who was in front, was forced right into the crowd of Republicans, who were bent on keeping him from reaching the speaker's desk. With one accord the men began striking at each other and the secretary was in great danger of being killed. "Kill him! kill him!" cried 100 voices. The women who were in the galleries yelled and one or two fainted. All was confusion and friends and enemies alike were fighting. The sole aim of the Democrats was to get King through the crowd to the speaker's desk with the governor's veto, and the Republicans were determined to hold him back until 12 o'clock, at which time the house would adjourn sine die. Inch by inch the Democrats Gained Ground.

Many persons were knocked down and trampled under foot. Revolvers were flourished in the air but as fast as one was drawn the man holding it was knocked down. The heavy chairs were torn from the floor by the mob and the desks were broken to pieces. Doors leading to other rooms were shattered by persons in the corridors trying to effect an entrance to the chamber. The police were powerless to check the mob which seemed bent on destroying everything in the room.

At 11:57 the excitement was intense. Men were wrestling at every part of the room and several of them were Bleeding from Numerous Wounds.

The Democrats were gradually forcing King toward the speaker's desk and the Republicans were growing weaker on account of many of their number being injured. A few seconds later, with his clothing torn from his body and his face bleeding, he was pushed by main strength through the crowd and thrown heavily against the speaker's desk. He still held the governor's veto in his hand, but it never reached the speaker.

Just as King was about to place it in his hands Speaker Adams kicked and beat back the crowd, and, in a voice which could be heard above the horrible din, cried:

"The House Has Adjourned!"

This raised a great cry from the crowd and everybody made a rush toward the speaker. The veto was torn from King's hands by a man who dashed out of the crowd with it and made good his escape. This practically ended the riot. Several small fights occurred, but the police and others finally succeeded in driving the men from the chamber. No less than two dozen persons were hurt. No arrests were made.

The trouble originated over the bill to supplant Custodian Griffin, a Democrat, with a Republican. The governor has three days in which to consider all measures. The bill was delivered to the governor two nights ago. It was his idea to hold it and then the legislature could not pass it over his veto, as adjournment would take place at 12.

The governor's secretary started with the bill within 10 minutes time. The Republicans attempted by force to prevent his reaching the legislative hall with the bill in time.

Adams, who was injured, was the representative of Parke county. He was kicked in the pit of the stomach and had to be carried from the hall.

THE CAPITOL.

On this question the Minneapolis Evening Journal says: Without solicitation on the part of Minneapolis, but at the instance of the country members, the house appointed a committee to come to this city and ask the exposition board upon what terms that property could be had for capitol purposes. The board, in response to that application, offered to turn over the exposition property clear of all debt to the state and to add to the ground already belonging to the exposition enough to square out the tract and give it good shape and make a present of the whole thing to the state. It is a very desirable location. The ground is high, sightly, historic, and there is a peculiar propriety in erecting there the capital of the state of Minnesota, overlooking the Falls of St. Anthony. It is easily accessible and convenient. It is within half a mile of the university, and the advantage of the proximity of these institutions is evident. It is in full view of every railroad train that passes through the city.

The legislature, having asked Minneapolis what this city would do in the way of furnishing a site for the capitol, other locations have also been proposed, and it is now agreed, and only awaits the formal action of the park board and the city council, to tender to the state probably a finer site than that occupied by any capitol building in the United States. This offer is Loring park, centrally located, within 10 minute's walk of the West hotel, and comprising an improved and beautifully ornamented tract of 38 acres of land and water. This property, at a low estimate, is worth at least $2,000,000. This Minneapolis offers to the state if it shall see fit to take it as a free gift.

Now, simply because Minneapolis, in response to the invitation of the legislature, has seen fit to be so liberal, St. Paul has been thrown into a fit of rage, and is in the greatest terror lest the legislature shall have the wisdom and the good sense to accept one or the other of these propositions, and thus save the state $300,000 or $400,000 on the expense of the capitol, Minneapolis is denounced in the most offensive terms, and is abused like a thief, and all the epithets and opprobrious terms available are applied to this city because she has seen fit to make a decent, respectful and liberal answer to the request of the legislature.

But that will not avail. Whether the legislature sees fit to accept the proposition which Minneapolis makes, and thus save the state the expenses, which may just as well be saved as not, of a capitol site, Minneapolis will be on record as having offered to the state as a free gift a site for the capitol on more attractive grounds than those occupied by any state house in the country.

The Future of Wheat.

Just what that will be no fellow seems able to say exactly. Since some time in January it has been way down at the heel and for a time the outlook was extremely dubious, with wheat way down to 40 or 41 cents. This week there appears to be a little boom in wheat and the price opens out at 48. From the indications on the market this is as liable to knock off as to raise a few cents, or it may hold about steady for awhile. The fact seems plain, however, that the days of wheat as a money-maker in this country are over for some time and the sooner our farmers all fully appreciate this fact, the better will it be for them. If they have not already done so they should commence this spring to meet this altered condition of things and get ready for something else. One thing has impressed itself upon most of them, and that is the fact that they are not raising as many bushels per acre as they used to do in the early day. This is not due to exhaustion of the soil, but to trying to do too much, trying to work more land than can properly be done. All this will change when the proper system is adopted and farmers will raise as much wheat as they do now on half the land—when this is done there will be a small profit in wheat even on present prices. At present a farmer raises ten bushels of wheat to the acre at a loss; if his land was doing what it ought to do he should get from 25 to 30 bushels per acre at a fair profit. So it seems to be a fact that if we expect to make any money on wheat we must so treat our soil as to make it yield three times what it does now.

COOLEST OF THE COOL

Harry Hayward Receives the Death Sentence Without Flinching.

DECLARES HE IS INNOCENT.

His Attorneys to Move for a New Trial of the Case on March 28.

MINNEAPOLIS, March 12.—Harry Hayward accepts the inevitable. He accepts it with a smile and with the philosophical remark that there is not so very much to live for, after all.

"Hanging is not the worst, by a good deal," said the condemned man, after sentence of death had been passed upon him. "It is as nothing compared to the stigma that a hanged man leaves behind him. I am innocent, but I have been convicted. That tells the whole story, so far as I am concerned now. I shall be hanged beyond a doubt in my own mind, but I shall go to the scaffold as I went today to my sentence. I have no faith in the result of a new trial. The evidence, as put in by the state, is too strong against me. I am the only man bearing all that testimony that knows positively who told the truth. Wilson lied deliberately—so did Jenks, or else he is desperately mistaken. I was never where these men have sworn they saw me. Oh, no, it's all over but the final ceremony. I fully expect to be hanged."

The Proceedings in Court.

The hands registered 10:15 when Judge Seagrave Smith entered. His appearance was the signal for quiet, although the hum of conversation broke forth again after he had taken his seat and awaited the coming of the defendant. Five minutes after the judge's arrival Harry Hayward came in with a deputy, and the gathering again became quiet.

The defendant paused outside of the railing while his bracelets were removed, and while the deputy was unlocking them Harry looked around casually, as if in search of a friendly face. He then entered the enclosure and removed his overcoat and rubbers.

Having removed his outer raiment, he seated himself at Erwin's side, and after nodding to the newspaper boys and several acquaintances, he chatted in an undertone with the Tall Pine.

Erwin's Speech.

"Has the defendant anything to say why judgment should not be passed upon him at this time?" asked Judge Smith.

"If it is the intention of the state to move sentence at this time," said Erwin, rising, "the defendant, through his counsel, moves for an arrest of judgment on the ground that the indictment did not charge murder in the first degree, nor in any degree, in fact. Again, the defendant, through his counsel, desires to give notice to the court and the prosecution at this time, that as soon as possible he will move for a new trial, alleging each and every one of the statutory grounds and each and every one of the exceptions to the overruling of objections to the introduction or rejection of certain testimony; and, further, on the ground that the trial was not fair, on account of the public terror overhanging the court."

"There has been no terror overhanging me," said Judge Smith, sharply.

"I did not wish to be understood as being personal," the Tall Pine hastened to say.

"Well, I am the court in this case," retorted Judge Smith.

"When I spoke," said Erwin, "I referred to all of us, of course."

The Motion for a New Trial.

The proceedings then lapsed into a casual conversation over the question as to the best time to present the formal motion for a new trial so as to have it occur, under the law, prior to the close of the present term of court. There was some slight disagreements as to date, but it was finally decided that the motion should be presented on March 28. The court then formally denied the motion for arrest of judgment.

"The defendant is ready to receive sentence, your honor," said Erwin, resuming his seat.

Hayward arose leisurely and sauntered over to the clerk's desk, upon the top of which he rested both hands as he faced the arbiter of his destiny.

"Have you anything to say why sentence should not be passed upon you at this time?" asked Judge Smith.

"Nothing, sir, except that I am innocent, in spite of the judgment of the 12 jurors."

Having said this, he lounged at ease, his elbow upon the desk and his chin resting upon his left hand. His right arm was akimbo and his legs crossed, and in this careless attitude he received the death sentence.

The Judge's Sentence.

In passing it, Judge Smith spoke in a low but perfectly audible voice. The duty devolving upon him was a painful one, and, though personally not a believer in capital punishment, he had, as the jury had been charged, nothing to do with this.

"You have had a fair trial," he went on. "The court has been particularly careful that the jury should not be subjected to any outside influence. They Reduced Rates to the Dairy Convention.

The railroads have made arrangements to give a rate of one and one-third fare, on the certificate plan, to all who attend the dairy convention in Crookston this week, provided 75 tickets are sold. Thus, if the number attending from all points on the Great Northern road and its branches equals 75 the rate will be given; so on the Northern Pacific line. As we understand it, when purchasing your ticket at your home station you pay full fare to Crookston, take a receipt of your agent there; this receipt will be signed by the secretary of the convention, and when presented to the agent here will entitle the holder to a return ticket at one-third regular fare.

ABOUT WHEELS.

Not In the Head But in the Shop of Hawkins & Co.

Hawkins & Co. received a Buffalo wheel this week. Weight 23lbs. Frank says she is a bird. By the way, they are expecting a cargo along any day, as the wheels were shipped about March 1st and they will then be ready to supply all demands.

Farley has disposed of his wheel—that world-beater that he used last winter and will buy one of Hawkins & Co. Is waiting for the arrival of a 21 pounder.

Somebody is going to buy some wheels this year—several factories, those represented by Hawkins & Co. have turned out 80,000 and over for the trade this year.

Commenting on that fact Geo. W. Roberts says: "I tell you that this bicycle business has lots to do with the price of horses this spring—that and electricity as a motive power for street cars is what breaks the horse's back—or the market anyhow."

Hawkins & Co will occupy the Charlie Thomas barber shop just north of Clysdale bakery for their factory—tired of sky parlors.

THAT PORTRAIT.

A life-size picture of Charlie Misner attracted much attention in his shop last week. Charlie took particular pains to tell everybody who commented on what a fine picture it was, that he wasn't so dead stuck on his shape as to blow himself for such an expensive thing "but," said he, "as long as I can get as fine a picture as that one simply by trading at a certain store awhile, I am not darn fool enough to neglect the chance, even if it is a handsome picture. Where did I get it? Well, I don't mind telling you, as I tell everybody else who comes in to look it, that I got it of Fontaine & Anglim, who will do the same by any cash customer of theirs. Which is why I am stuck on its shape."

A LONG HEAD.

Gen. Andy Elken gave our reporter a birds-eye view of the inside workings of that surveyor-general of logs and lumber business, from which we should judge that the "general" business was more for sound than practical every-day money-making business. We should judge that a man puts in his time and the necessary expenses and takes big chances of being able to get anything out—except, always, the title "General." We suggested as much to "General" Elken, who looked at us with a quizzical smile which ran from the Nw¼ of his left eye to the Se¼ of his boot-top, as he said: "Thought you was a politician, me boy; know ye not that "generals," when they are onto their job and work their graft properly, build mills and railroads and things and are wafted eventually into the United States Senate?" Saying which he slyly winked the other eye and we all smiled.

"The People Of the Northwest portion of the United States can congratulate themselves on having the elegant traveling accommodations offered by the North-Western line between Minneapolis, St. Paul and Chicago which the wealthiest and oldest roads in the effete East have not yet found it possible to excel.—The Times, Monticello, Minn.

"The most Perfect Train Service between Minneapolis, St. Paul and Chicago is that offered by The North-Western Line. This route also affords a splendid view of lakes, rivers and hills of the picturesque State of Wisconsin. As for the North-Western Limited, it is a model of luxury and elegance. It leaves Minneapolis and St. Paul for Chicago every night in the year.—The Traveler, San Francisco.

"The man With Ideas for Comfort in Travel is abroad in the land and The North-Western Line has met him before any other line in the Northwest. This line has without doubt taken the most active and aggressive part in securing the Comfort and Conveniences of its passengers and in its North-Western Limited has given the Twin Cities the Best Train to Chicago.—The Sun, Brandon, Man.

HANDY WITH GUNS.

IOWA BANK ROBBERY RESULTS IN BLOODSHED.

One of the Robbers Dead and the Bank Cashier and a Prominent Merchant Suffering From Wounds—Good Work of a Posse.

ADEL, Ia., March 8.—A desperate and partly successful effort was made to rob the Adel State bank here. A few minutes before 9 o'clock two strangers drove into town and tied their team near the public square. They got out, and, without attracting any particular attention, stepped into the bank. The cashier, S. M. Leach, had just taken from the vault the currency for the day's business. C. P. Bailey, a leading merchant, was writing at a desk in the lobby. They were the only occupants of the bank. One of the strangers stepped up to the cashier's window and said he wanted to deposit some money. Almost the same instant the second robber, who was behind, and fired, the charge taking effect in his shoulder. He then ordered the cashier to hand over the money. The latter handed over a small sack of silver and then, though badly wounded, seized a drawer containing about $3,000 in gold and currency, and, staggering to the vault, he put the money in, shut and locked the door. Weak from loss of blood he then fell to the floor. One of the robbers now sprang over the counter and began shoveling all the money in sight into a sack and the one with the gun turned to Mr. Bailey, who was still standing at the desk, and fired a shot at him, wounding him in the neck. He fell to the floor and the robber but missed him. By this time a crowd had gathered outside, and the two robbers, one carrying the money and the other wielding the gun, made a rush for their buggy. Fully 50 shots were fired at them but none apparently took effect. They coolly got into their buggy, and, still keeping the crowd at bay, drove rapidly away. Several men sprang upon horses and followed, and a running fight of several miles ensued. About four miles south of town the buggy driven by the robbers struck a tree and broke a wheel. The robbers, still closely pursued, abandoned their rig. One hid behind a bank, where he was soon captured, and the one with the gun ran into a barn near by. The barn was surrounded but the bandit

Held the Crowd at Bay.

He was called upon to surrender, but resolutely refused and said he would never be taken alive. After a parley the crowd partially untied the captured robber and compelled him to set fire to the barn. The advancing flames finally forced the robber to come out, but he still refused to surrender and the crowd of citizens fired a volley at him. He fell dead, pierced by three bullets. Two took effect in the head and one in the side, and either would have proven fatal. It was with the utmost difficulty that the angry crowd was prevented from wreaking vengeance on the robber who was still alive. But Sheriff Payne hustled him into a buggy and drove rapidly back to town.

The dead robber's name is O. P. Wilkins, and was released only a few weeks ago from the Minnesota penitentiary at Stillwater, where he served three years for robbery.

The robbers secured only about $300 from the bank and the money was all found where their buggy broke down.

City Election.

Somewhere about the 22d of this month will be the limit for a ticket to be qualified and as yet no move is made to call a convention. This state of things seems to imply a condition of apathy unparalleled yet it may not be quite that. For the position of mayor there certainly does not seem to be an overwhelming desire upon the part of any who would be the proper persons to elect. For the other offices we have seen but few who were personally in the field—but these are doing lots of quiet wood-sawing on the side. It does not seem probable, at this writing, that party lines will be drawn. This would make an interesting contest and is the way it should be.

There has been a very sharp increase of the insane population of the state the past year. The number in the three hospitals Feb. 28 was 2,705, as against 2,368 two years ago, and 2,488 one year ago, an increase of 14.2 per cent in the past two years, and an increase of 8.7 per cent during the past year. The number of patients on hand Feb. 28, 1893, was smaller than usual on account of the supreme court decision that set at liberty a considerable number of patients, which accounts for the extraordinary increase of the past year. The normal increase is apparently about 7 per cent. At the present rate of increase there will be 2,900 patients Feb. 28, 1896, 3,100 Feb. 28, 1897, and 3,300 patients Feb. 28, 1898.

PINE LAND LEASES.

Auditor Dunn Will Probably Cancel a Large Number.

ST. PAUL, March 8.—The Pioneer Press publishes a three column article regarding pine land deals which have been entered into in this state recently. It claims that permits to cut over 300,000,000 feet of pine has been illegally issued, and that the state has very little pine left. These permits were issued under the excuse that the pine was in danger of being destroyed. Some of them were made out in 1892, but notwithstanding the alleged danger not a stick has been cut up to the present time on many of the leases. It is charged that the lessees never intended to cut the pine, but are simply holding it for speculation. It is also charged that no accurate estimate of the timber has been made, and that such estimates as were made emanated from the auditor's office in the state capitol.

The first thing State Auditor Dunn did when he went into office in January last, was to send out his pine land examiners with instructions to discover and examine those lands covered by outstanding permits, and to report whether or not the holders of the permits were cutting timber, and if not, why not.

The result of the examination shows that large quantities of the state's pine stumpage has been illegally sold as it never was and is not now in danger of destruction or waste and that in a large number of cases the purchasers have not complied with the terms of their permit, are not cutting pine and are simply holding it as a secure investment or for speculative purposes, without having invested a dollar of their own money.

When Auditor Dunn was asked by a reporter what action he proposed to take in the matter he answered that he should cancel every permit issued contrary to law.

"This is a very serious matter," he continued, "and I shall make haste slowly, not taking any action until after careful examination and due deliberation. Each case will be thoroughly examined into and decided upon its merits, and when I am satisfied that the whole facts of any one case have been ascertained by the state's overseers I will act promptly and decisively upon it."

CHAPTER X.

A PROMISE SOON BROKEN.

Colonel Maynard was in the habit of making frequent visits to his wife and without warning. Laura understood perfectly the embarrassing position in which he would be placed at surprising a Confederate spy under the same roof with herself and protected by her. She had no mind to place him in any such position. When Miss Baggs went up stairs, Laura posted a sentry in the person of Uncle Daniel to keep a sharp lookout and give notice of the colonel's approach in order that Miss Baggs might be got out of the way before his arrival. Daniel sat down on a bench on the veranda and lit his pipe. He was an old man and prone to dose. It was not long before Lookout mountain across the river began to sway among the clouds, the nearer trees began to rock, the old negro's head fell upon his breast, and he slept.

It was nearly 10 o'clock when Laura, having given up the coming of her husband that night and for once in her life rejoicing thereat, was about to dismiss Daniel from his responsible position when she heard a step on the veranda. Thinking it was Daniel walking back and forth to keep himself awake, she paid no attention to it. There was a turning of the knob to the front door, and in another moment Colonel Maynard stood on the threshold of the sitting room looking in upon Mrs. Fain, Laura, Souri and Miss Baggs. He was about to enter when, observing a strange person, he hesitated. Laura advanced, and taking him by the hand led him to another room. He had only once before seen Miss Baggs and then in disguise and did not recognize her.

"Why, sweetheart," he said to his wife, "you're trembling."

"You came in so hurriedly."

"I am hurried. We cross the river tomorrow morning."

"Tomorrow morning! Oh, Mark, why couldn't they wait a few days?"

"If wives and sweethearts had the giving of orders, Uncle Sam would have his armies always in winter quarters."

"Why couldn't this happiness have lasted just a little longer?"

"And then still a little longer. Come, I have but a short time to stay. Let me say goodby to the baby."

Laura led the way up stairs and drew the curtains from the cradle, exposing the sleeping infant.

There was something in the innocence, the absence of force in the little slumberer, so different from the scenes in which he was wont to mingle, to set in motion a train of feelings in Mark Maynard to which he had thus far been a stranger. On the one side was the wife he loved and the sleeping child; on the other, what now appeared toilsome marches, nights spent on wet ground, sickness, mangling by shell and bullets and saber cuts. A year before he had loved these hardships, these dangers. Now a new element had entered into his life, and at least while he gazed on the little stranger (the only life that had come to him among the many gone since the war began) he felt a strange repugnance to entering upon the coming campaign.

"My boy, my boy," he said huskily, the thought suddenly coming to him that he might never see wife or child again, "how can I now risk leaving you to struggle on to manhood unprotected?" Then, recognizing his weakness, he said, with a quick born smile, "But you have your mother, and I must win the star of a brigadier for you to play with."

But war's quick and imperative demands gave him little time for the indulgence of such feelings. He tried to turn away. Again and again he drew the curtains of the cradle, only to draw them back for one more look.

"Laura," he said suddenly, "all is changed. Before you and he came I did my duty as a soldier because it was not hard to do and because it pleased me. Now it will be hard, and I shall do it that you and he may not be disgraced in me. How can I ever leave a blot on my name and have that child grow up to know it?"

Laura, seeing how hard it was for him to draw himself from the cradle, took his hand and led him away.

Going down stairs, they found the house silent. All the family were in bed. Maynard knew that it was time he had departed. It was very late, and he must ride eight miles to camp and be on the march with his brigade before daylight. But he could hardly tear himself away from the house. The sleeping child up stairs seemed to have brought from the unknown whence he came a maze of gentler emotions, which were drifting like smoke wreaths about his father, obscuring the way from their peaceful influence.

There was one more embrace, then another last one, then another final one, then a stirrup kiss, and Colonel Mark Maynard rode back through the night to camp.

Not long after his arrival bugles sounded the reveille. It was 2 o'clock in the morning, and the men were aroused to begin their advance to the front. Sending for Jakey Slack, the colonel gave him a note to take back to Laura at the plantation. He had repeated his adieus so often in person that one would hardly think it necessary to send any more on cold paper, but Maynard's heart strings were pulling him as strongly away from war as his duty was forcing him toward it. Besides he knew that Laura would treasure every word from him.

Jakey mounted Tom and rode in the gray of the morning to deliver the note. When he reached the plantation, he was obliged to do a good deal of pounding and ringing before he could get into the house. Finally Mrs. Maynard's maid, Alice, let him in, and considering the fact that Mrs. Maynard was in bed and Alice stood in very close confidential relations with her, Jakey consented to deliver the note to the maid and waited to see if there was any reply. Alice returned and said that her mistress would be down in a moment. Presently she entered, dressed in a morning wrapper.

"Jakey," she said, taking the boy by the hand and smoothing the hair out of his eyes, "can I rely on you to do something for me?"

"Could the colonel?"

"You are going to the front, and no one can tell what may happen. You'll probably have to meet your enemies some time, and the colonel says that a battle may come at any day. I want you to promise me that if anything should happen to the colonel you will come here as fast as you can and let me know of it. Do you understand?"

"Y' mean ef th' colonel gits hit on th' for'ead with a cannon ball?"

"Oh, Jakey, don't talk so! I mean if he gets sick or wounded or in any other trouble, will you come and tell me at once?"

"Reckon."

Laura knew that this was Jakey's way of making a promise, and she was satisfied. She told him to wait a few minutes and went out of the room. When she returned, she brought two parcels with her.

"This one is for you, Jakey," she said, handing him one of them. "It's a luncheon. Put it in your haversack and give the other to the colonel. And hand him this note."

She gave him a tiny white envelope, within which in a few words was concentrated what may be best expressed as three days' rations of desiccated affection.

Jakey took the parcels, and placing the note in his cap went out, mounted Tom and dashed away after his commander.

Maynard's brigade crossed the river south of Lookout mountain and passed over the mountain's face where it juts on to the river. His command was but one of the many, all moving forward toward a retreating enemy.

He marched through Chattanooga to Rossville, situated at a gap in Mission Ridge. From there he was ordered forward, entering what is called McLenmore's cove, an undulating space lying between two ranges, Mission Ridge and the Pigeon mountains. There the brigade encamped on a field soon to become memorable as the scene of one of the most desperate, the most dramatic of all the battles of the civil war—the field of Chickamauga.

CHAPTER XI.

A RACE FOR LIFE.

Major Burke's command was ordered to guard the telegraph line extending south from Rossville. The regiment was strung out to a considerable distance, each troop guarding a certain portion of the line. Corporal Ratigan was placed in charge of a section of two miles. Putting himself at the head of eight men, he led them to the end of his section nearest camp, and dividing them into two reliefs of four men each posted them at intervals of half a mile along the line under his care. At sunset, not being relieved, he prepared to spend the night in bivouac. Selecting a clump of trees under which to rest and cutting some boughs for beds—or rather to keep the men from the damp ground—the corporal established the relief, off duty, there. The rations were cooked and eaten, after which the guard was relieved. The corporal went out always with the relief, posted his men and slept between times.

It was 2 o'clock in the morning when Ratigan started out to post the last relief for the night. The men followed, grum and stupid, having just been wakened out of a sound sleep and not yet thoroughly aroused. The party rode to the extreme end of the section, left a man and turned back, leaving a man at every half mile. Corporal Ratigan had posted the last man half a mile from the bivouac and was returning when suddenly, turning a bend in the road running through a wood, he descried a dark object before him beside the road. He drew rein and watched and listened. The dark object, as he fixed his gaze upon it, grew into the dim outlines of a vehicle, but it was too dark for him to see if it contained any one. The corporal, whose mind had been fixed on the special duty of protecting the line, at once assumed that some one was trying to cut the wire. He put spurs to his horse and called out:

"Halt, there! Throw up your hands and surrender, or I'll shoot."

The only response was a swish from a whip which came down evidently on a horse's back, and the dark mass before him vanished around the bend in the road. The corporal dashed on, but before he could get around the bend the object had turned again. He could hear the rattling of wheels and sounds of a horse's hoofs digging into the road at a gallop. Whoever was behind that horse must be driving at a frightful pace, for urging his own beast to his best he seemed to lose rather than gain ground. Coming to a straight piece of road, he could again see the object before him, but in the darkness it was simply a darker spot than its surroundings. Suddenly the ears of the corporal caught a sound that filled him with astonishment. It was a voice urging forward the horse he was chasing. Ratigan had supposed that whoever was trying to escape was a man, yet this voice was different from a man's tones. It sounded like that of a child or a woman. The corporal was puzzled. Then it suddenly occurred to him that perhaps he was chasing Betsy Baggs.

Now, the corporal was as conscientious a man as there was in the Army of the Cumberland and one of the most gallant, but when the suspicion fell upon him like a chill that he was after a woman whose presence, for the brief period he had been with her, had thrown a strange spell over him he ceased to urge his horse with the same pressure as before. In the midst of the chase there had come a contest within his own breast between two conflicting emotions. If Betsy Baggs were in front of him, what would be the result if he should catch her? He must turn her over to the military authorities, and the chances were she would be executed for a spy. On the other hand, supposing he permitted her to escape, he would be liberating an enemy far more dangerous to the army in which he served than a dozen batteries. In short, he would be a traitor to his comrades and his cause.

Miss Baggs, for it was she, had passed many pickets, had experienced many lucky escapes. She had browbeaten officers and had cozened soldiers. She had gone through a dozen places where a man would surely have been arrested. And now, after passing so many dangers, on the very eve of success, she suddenly found herself in the most critical of all the situations she had ever been placed in.

Meanwhile the long legs of Bobby Lee were getting over the ground at an astonishing pace. It was not the triangulation of a former race for sport with Corporal Ratigan, but the quick, short jumps of a race for life. And Bobby seemed to know the stake. Never in his former flights had his ears been turned back so eagerly to catch the low tones of his mistress. Never had there been so much feeling in that mistress' voice. It was: "Go on, Bobby! Good old horse. Get up! On, on, on! That's a dear boy. It's life and death with me, Bobby," a continued stream of broken words and sentences, all of which Bobby seemed to understand and act upon as if he had been a human being.

The fugitive knew that the chase could not be a long one. Her crazy vehicle was like a rotten hulk in a storm without sea room. To the north was the Tennessee river, and no means of crossing. Ahead was Chickamauga creek, but between her and it lay the scattered forces of the left wing of the Union army. She knew the ground well and had as good a knowledge of the positions of the troops as one could have of an army constantly changing. The point from which she had started was half a mile west of Rossville on the Lafayette road. A mile of chasing had brought her near a fork, the left road leading across Chickamauga creek by Dyer's bridge, the right leading directly south. She determined to take the left hand road, intending, if she should succeed in reaching Dyer's mill, about a mile from the creek, to strike a ford some distance below that she remembered having once crossed.

These possibilities flashed through her mind like messages over a telegraph wire while the thud of hoofs and the clattering of her pursuer's swinging saber were sounding in her ears.

"On, on, Bobby; for heaven's sake, go on!"

Would it not be best for her to leave her horse and buggy in the road and take to the woods? No. They would mark the point where she had left them. But her pursuer would not know which side of the road she had taken, and there would be an even chance that he would follow on the wrong side. Something must be done; the race could not last forever; the man behind seemed to be gaining, and then the dread of coming upon a Union camp!

She was about to bring her horse to a stand and jump from her buggy when the clatter behind her—Ratigan had turned a slight bend in the road—sounded so loud, so near, that instead of doing so she gave him a cut with the whip.

"There's no time now, Bobby. We must put a greater distance between us and the Yankee. Get up, Bobby! Oh, go on! Why haven't you wings?"

Heavens, what is that ahead? Tents, white and ghostly in the gloom! And how many of them! The whole field is covered!

Nearer comes the clatter from behind. In front is a sleeping regiment, brigade, perhaps a whole division. It was not there yesterday. It must be in transit. Oh, why should it have halted just in time to block the way?

"God help me, I must take my chances and go on."

Sentinels were pacing on their beats about the camps. In some cases the beats led along the road, but not across it. Right through these chains of sentinels, right into the heart of this sleeping multitude of armed men, dashed the woman whose only weapons of defense were Bobby Lee and her antiquated vehicle.

"Halt!"

"Go on, Bob!"

A shot, a bullet singing like a tuning fork in ears which already sang loud enough in themselves with excitement.

"Turn out the guard!"

Following Miss Baggs came Corporal Ratigan, to find the road in front of him blocked by half a dozen men with as many muskets pointed right up in his face.

He uttered an involuntary "Thank God!" He must be delayed; the responsibility for the escape of the fugitive would be with them. If indeed she were Miss Baggs, he would regard himself fortunate at the delay.

"What's the matter?" asked one of the men.

"I'm chasing some one in front. I suspect a telegraph breaker."

"Ah! That's it, is it? Well, go on; we've stopped the wrong person."

The corporal regretted that the interview had been so brief, the interruption so short. He had no option but to dash on. Before the fugitive there stood a man in the middle of the road with a musket leveled straight at her, or rather at the coming mass, which he could not distinguish. Miss Baggs did not see him till she got within a dozen feet of him and heard:

"Halt, or I'll fire!"

Rising in her seat and concentrating all her strength in one effort, she brought her whip down on the horse's back, at the same time holding him in the center of the road by the reins. The man was knocked in one direction, stunned, and his musket went flying in the other.

And now each one of the chain of sentries through which the fair dispatch stealer's horse dragged her and her swaying buggy with a series of lunges, hearing shots, the cries of guards, the clatter of horses' hoofs, the rattling of wheels, and seeing something coming through the darkness as Miss Baggs approached, shouted "Halt!" "Turn out the guard!" "Who comes there?" and a score of other similar cries, to none of which Miss Baggs paid any other attention than to fly through and from them as from the hand of death. A score of shots were fired at her along half a mile of road while she was running the gantlet.

And now the last sentry is passed, and the woman shoots out from between the rows of white tents into a free road ahead. The noises are left behind. But amid the confusion of distant sounds is one which, coming with a low, continued rattle, strikes terror into her heart. A familiarity with war has taught her its calls. She hears the beating of the "long roll." The whole camp is aroused. A legion of Yankees may soon be in pursuit.

Corporal Ratigan was stopped by every sentinel who had tried to check Miss Baggs. After an explanation to each he was suffered to go on. The men who stopped him transmitted the information at once to the guard tent that some one—doubtless an enemy—was being chased. The force was a division of infantry, with no cavalry except a mounted escort to the general commanding. Some of these were ordered in pursuit. There was a hurried saddling of horses, sprinkled with oaths at the delays encountered, and three cavalrymen mounted and dashed after Miss Baggs and her pursuer. But before they started a couple of miles had been placed between her and the camps.

The gray of the morning was by this time beginning to reveal objects with greater distinctness. Ratigan, coming to a rise in the ground just beyond the camps, saw the buggy about two miles ahead swaying like the dark hull of a ship rolling through the billows of an ocean. For a moment he hesitated between his duty as a soldier and that quick, sharp something, be it love, bewitchment or a natural sympathy of man for weaker woman, while beads of cold perspiration stood on his forehead. It seemed to him that if he should do his duty he would be acting the part of an executioner, not only that, but the executioner of a woman—a woman whose image had got into his heart and his head and never left him a moment's peace since she first threw the spell of her entrancing personality about him. It was a hard struggle, and from the nature of the case could not be a long one. Duty won. He shouted to his horse, gave him a dig with both spurs and dashed forward.

There was a depression in the ground down which the corporal plunged. Then the road ran along a level for awhile, with another slight rise beyond. As he rode down the declivity the fugitive was on the crest of the second rise. She stood up and turned to catch a glance behind her. She saw a horseman—she was too far to recognize the corporal—dashing after her. Below her was a wooded space, and she noticed that which gave her a glimmer of hope. The road forked. Urging her horse onward, she aimed to get on one of the two roads beyond the fork while her pursuer was in the hollow back of her, trusting that she might escape, as she had escaped before, by forcing him to choose between two roads, and trusting that he might take the wrong one.

Down the declivity her racer plunged while Ratigan was galloping down the one behind her. So steep was the road and so swift her horse's pace that the danger of death by mangling seemed greater than death by hanging. She reached the bottom, where the road ran level to the fork and the wood. Hope urged her. It was not 100 yards to the point she was so anxious to reach.

Passing over a rut at the very fork of the road that seemed her only chance for escape, the old buggy gave a dismal groan, as much in sympathy with the mistress it had served so well as a death rattle, and flew into a hundred pieces.

Is the Word "America" Peruvian?

Dr. John Murray has made a most interesting contribution to the discussion of the origin of the name America. As this name is a personal matter, it may prove interesting to know the doctor's position. He points out that the oldest but one of the maps of the new world bears the name Tamarique upon it. Even today the title "Sierra Amerique" is given to a mountain range in Nicaragua, once inhabited by a tribe called Amerriques. The sacred books of the Peruvians show that the national name of this once important race was Amarca, or America.

Tamarique is, therefore, supposed to stand for Terra Amerique (the land of America).

In the day of Vespucci nicknames abounded. They were given to nearly all, on all manner of pretexts and for many reasons. The Christian name of Vespucci was Amerigo. What could have been more natural than the slight alteration to America Vespucci? And the scholarly Dr. Murray believes that instead of his giving his name to the western hemisphere the hemisphere's most ancient title was bestowed upon him by alliteration.

We have often felt sad for Columbus' sake. His contemporaries showed the Genoese scant courtesy. And one has wondered that even his name was not given to the land he discovered. But if America is older than he or Vespucci this reproach is removed.—New York Ledger.

An Actor's Hard Lines.

When quite a boy, the famous comedian Buckstone joined a company of traveling players, and some time before his death gave an amusing account of his early struggles as an actor. "I was a country actor," he said, "and among other vicissitudes once walked from Northampton to London—72 miles—on fourpence halfpenny." His costume "consisted of a threadbare whitey blue coat, with tarnished metal buttons, secured at the throat, because I wore underneath what we term a flowered waistcoat made of glazed chintz and of a very showy pattern, generally adopted when playing country boys and singing comic songs, which at that time was my vocation. I will not attempt to describe my hat, while my trousers must only be delicately alluded to, as they were made of what was originally white duck, but as they had been worn about six weeks and having myself been much in the fields there was a refreshing tint of green and clay color about them." He carried a small bundle containing a red wig and a pair of russet boots. Under his arm was a portfolio containing sketches from nature and some attempts at love poetry, while on his feet to perform this distance of 72 miles were a pair of dancing pumps tied up at the heels with pack threads.—New York Advertiser.

Why Ice Floats.

Ice is specifically "lighter" than water just about to freeze, and therefore floats upon it. There is one reason why the formation of ice usually, but not always, begins at the surface. Another reason is because of its peculiar law of expansion. The general law is that cold induces contraction. This holds good in the case of water only to a certain point. When water has cooled down to within 7.4 degrees of freezing, it ceases to contract as before, and, with increased cold, actually begins to expand and continues to do so until it freezes. This expansion causes the colder portions of the water to rise to the surface.

Above we have said that ice does not always begin to form at the surface of the water. The exception is in the case of what is known as "ground" or "anchor ice." In this case the whole body of the water is cooled at the same time to below the freezing point, and the substance at the bottom, such as the stones and pebbles of river or lake beds, serve as a nucleus or point of congelation and crystallization for the water. This rare species of ice is formed under such peculiar circumstances that others than students and experimenters seldom see it.—St. Louis Republic.

Morality.

The teaching of morality, though it is impressive, can hardly be recovered after having been abandoned for a long time. Nay, we may rather venture to say that when a person gets corrupted the doctrines of morality expire altogether. Whereas the doctrines of religion can never be extinguished in those who once adhered to its teaching. The Ten Commandments being given by the supreme Power are so deeply implanted in the heart of man that they can hardly be forgotten. On the contrary, they stir up and remind the wrongdoer of his misdeeds, so that sooner or later he repents and turns to do good to the credit of himself.—Lewis P. Hirsch.

Rats and Mice.

Rats and mice are difficult to deal with. Poison is out of the question, for they always choose a place in the house to die. Traps fail to ensnare them. The only plan to drive them away absolutely is to get a quantity of potash, put it in the sun till it becomes soft, and then with a stick smear every hole that can be found. Sooner than walk through this a rat will change his abode. From a druggist who sells glass get all the pieces they throw away, pound fine and throw in the holes. Being sharp, it will cut their feet. This combination—potash and glass—is a never failing cure.—Family Journal.

Where the Curfew Sounds.

I was lately staying at Berwick-on-Tweed and noted several curious facts connected with it. The parish church, which is of the time of Cromwell, has no tower, the bells being at the town hall. Hard by the latter there is a pair of stocks apparently in working order. The curfew is tolled at 8 o'clock and at 4 o'clock in the morning. Winter and summer a bell rings for opening the town gates, though in point of fact they have been open for hundreds of years.—Notes and Queries.

THE good people of St. Paul imagined they saw an eclipse recently. It must have been the shadow of Minneapolis reaching for the capitol, that they mistook for a total eclipse.

SOME uneasy spirit or other has suggested the name of H. F. Boen for next governor—or the Populist candidate therefor, which is quite a different thing. By the way, there is many a stick in that party who would make a worse run than he.

THE decision of the attorney general knocks the drainage business out completely, providing the decision is correct. In any event it will have a tendency to throw cold water upon it. Some very good constitutional lawyers take exceptions to the views of the attorney general on that subject.

THE jury in the Hayward case voiced the sentiments of nine-tenths of the people of Minnesota when they rendered a verdict of "guilty" It now only remains for the hangman to do his duty and the world will be rid of one of the coolest villains that ever disgraced society. It appears to be a case of lack of proper restraint in his youth. What a fearful retribution for his unhappy parents.

THE MESSAGE, which has been a Crookston institution ever since it was founded five years ago has been removed to Fargo. With the commencement of its sixth volume, next month, it will be printed at Fargo, but will aim to cover the same field as before. Ever since Rev. R. H. Battey took hold of it The Message has been one of the best religious papers coming to our table, and we are assured by its publisher that it will lose none of its accustomed vim by the change.

THE Populist party is no more—at any rate Attorney General W. A. Standish, of North Dakota says so, and he ought to know what he is talking about. He says that he has joined himself unto the new silver party, and the Populist party must naturally gravitate thereunto as a matter of course. W. H. commenced his career in the Northwest on a farm, near Edna, in this county. As a farmer he was not a brilliant financial success, but as an agitator he seems to have accumulated some stuff.

AFTER more or less tom-foolery and boy-play our solons seem to have decided that the capitol building shall remain in St. Paul but remain as it is and there is the mistake of the thing. It seems beyond all question that the present building is wholly inadequate for the purpose for which it is intended and our legislators should have either left this matter in such a shape as to enable the capitol commission to go ahead with the work, or else they should have allowed Minneapolis to have offered to furnish a building free of cost to the state. We do not believe their action in the matter will be acceptable to the people of Minnesota.

LOOKING at the Ives impeachment case from a non-political standpoint one can come to no other conclusion than that it will never get beyond the judiciary committee. It is clear that it grew out of the late efforts of Judge Ives to purify the moral atmosphere of Polk county in general and East Grand Forks in particular. It is possible that the Judge did not quite agree with Brer Bierly, of the Grand Forks News, as to the source of the fever epedemic, which prevailed over there last year possibly attributed it to another stench than the one alleged by Bierly, i. e. the river, and located it just over the river on this side, and desired to remove the danger, so that Bierly should be in no more danger of contagion, however, be that as it may the facts are, probably that if the judge had seen fit to allow things to slide along as they had been he never would have been molested. All the stuff about "incompetency" etc. etc., is a side issue and cuts no figure in this case. If the Judge is incompetent the people have a good right to elect that kind of material if they prefer it to better, but we have heard very competent legal gentlemen say of Judge Ives that while as a practicing attorney he may not have been as successful as some, as a judge he was way ahead of most attorneys; that he had a superior judicial turn of mind that enabled him to arrive at just and right conclusions by intuition and that he was one of the most successful judges ever on the bench in this district. His record of course will be sufficient evidence on this point, and the others are amply protected. We do not expect to see the matter ever brought into the senate.

The Record, of Detroit Becker Co., says: Ex-Senator Sampson, of Crookston, spent a few days in this vicinity last week visiting friends. While here he talked a little politics and, it is said, proselyted a luminous star of populism. The republican expanse of horizon is brighter at the present time that of the other parties, so it does not take much labor to make converts of those who expect anything from politics in the future.

Do you Wish to Learn about Fruit Growing, etc., in Minnesota?

The Minnesota State Horticultural Society was organized twenty-eight years ago for the sole purpose of gathering and disseminating reliable information in regard to fruit, vegetable, flowers and tree culture in this state, and is now one of the strongest societies in America. It has nothing to sell and is in no sense a money-making institution. Its reports are printed by the state, and its expenses paid largely from the same source.

The members, now numbering several hundred, pay an annual fee of $1.00. This fee pays for all the advantages of the society, including reports of last year, 538 pages, its monthly publication of forty pages and several valuable plant premiums, worth in all several times the fee paid. The state is already paying two-thirds the cost of all this, and by paying the remaining one-third, viz: $1.00, you will secure the full benefits of all this work. Is it good policy to buy or plant, especially fruits, in this climate without learning from this absolutely reliable source what to plant and how to care for it.

SELECTIONS

FLOTSAM AND JETSAM.

The Strange Story of the Disappearance of a Pony and Her Return.

In the spring of 1893 Henry Spears, living some miles below Shreveport, La., had the misfortune to lose, during the big overflow which at that time almost desolated the whole Red river valley, besides his entire cotton crop and a few cows which he had been too busy to convey to the hills for safety, a fine young bay mare named Flotsam, of which he was very fond. Mr. Spears made every effort possible to save his levee, and though he had removed his family to the high lands at the first rise in the river he remained himself upon the plantation, keeping the hands at work day and night raising the embankment. As Flotsam was his favorite riding animal, Mr. Spears kept her with him and was on her back almost constantly.

When the worst came, however, it came very suddenly, and Mr. Spears was standing in the barn door directing the hands who were inside collecting sacks which they were to fill with sand to strengthen the levee. Poor Flotsam, though, had been left just outside the lot gate with the bridle across her neck, and what was Mr. Spears' dismay when he heard the crash of the levee to see the mare turn upon her heels and ran toward the river as if to meet the inrushing water. Of course she was soon lost in the flood. Every inch of the levee seemed to have given way at once, so sudden was the overflow, and for a whole day and night Mr. Spears and the men were prisoners in the barn. Finally a relief boat from Shreveport picked them up, but nothing was seen or heard of Flotsam.

A whole year passed. The return of spring brought another rise in the river, and Mr. Spears, like the rest of the gallant planters, strained every nerve to avert the terrible destruction. One or two places above him had gone under early, thus relieving the strain upon his own levee, and one day as he stood upon the top of the big embankment looking at the whirling, mad waters which meant death to so many helpless creatures, his attention was attracted by an object floating down stream very near the shore. It was nothing strange to see tossed about in midstream a bit of a housetop, a wagon body, a bed or a mattress, a dead mule, or now and then a lifeless human form.

The object appeared to be alive, but it was quite close to Spears before he discovered that it was not one floating object, but two, and proved to be nothing less than a bay mare with a young colt clinging to her tail with its mouth. The mare gave a short whinny and a toss of her head when she drew quits up to the land's edge, and when she began to scramble up the bank, the colt straggling after, what was Mr. Spears' surprise to recognize his own long lost Flotsam coming back to him, bringing her first foal along. Mr. Spears named the colt Jetsam and felt that, after all, the waters had been good to him.

The most plausible explanation to this strange occurrence seems to be that, in floating down stream in the flood of 1893, the mare was washed ashore at some point where she was well cared for. Later on she was taken overland up the river and most probably sold to a planter above Shreveport, where she awaited the water of another overflow to bear her back to her old home again. Mr. Spears made repeated inquiries, but nothing definite was ever ascertained.—Philadelphia Times.

Ogontz and Its Indian Hero.

Ogontz seems a rather odd name for a young ladies' seminary—and thereby hangs a somewhat romantic tale. It will be remembered that the school occupies what was the beautiful home of Jay Cooke. When Mr. Cooke was a very young man, he went on a visit to the very far west, and there formed a close friendship with an Indian chief, Ogontz. The friendship never altered through all the changes of later years, and when Jay Cooke achieved great wealth and built his beautiful home on the suburbs of Philadelphia he called it after his faithful Indian friend, who visited him there. At the time of his visit a cast was taken of the handsome Ogontz, and today his dignified, noble countenance in bronze looks down upon the girls who fill the house which bears his name. The girls have adopted the head in their seal, it ornaments the Ogontz souvenir, and, in fact, it appears in all places where it can appropriately be shown. It seemed odd at the World's fair, in the charming section which held the display from this school, to see the massive, strong head of an Indian towering over the work of young women, but when one knows that it is the monument of an unusual and beautiful friendship it falls directly into drawing.—Philadelphia Press.

Setting the River on Fire.

"Setting the Thames on fire" is an oft heard saying, but probably few people know its origin, concerning which the following explanation has been given: In the time of our forefathers corn was ground in a rough instrument called a "temse." This was merely a stone hollowed out to receive the corn, with a piece of wood passed through it, which, being rapidly turned, ground the corn to flour. If the wooden handle was turned with sufficient force, the friction of the wood against the stone would cause the stick to catch fire, but as it required considerable energy to produce this effect the person who could accomplish it was thought smart, and he who could "set the temse on fire" was pretty sure to be a good worker in other ways. After a time the "temse" was superseded by better machinery.—New York Telegram.

HYMNS AND HYMN WRITERS.

"Jesus, Lover of My Soul," was written by Charles Wesley just after an escape from a mob.

"Ye Wretched, Hungry, Starving Poor" is one of the best hymns written by women. The writer of this was Anne Steele.

"O Sacred Head, Now Wounded," is a translation of a translation. The original hymn was the "Salve Caput," by St. Bernard.

"There Is a Fountain Filled With Blood" is the most popular of Cowper's hymns. It is considered one of the classic lyrics of the English language.

"Nearer, My God, to Thee," was the work of Sarah Flower Adams and first appeared in a volume of hymns and anthems published in 1840 by Rev. W. J. Fox.

"And Are We Yet Alive?" is by Charles Wesley. It is the opening hymn used by Methodist conferences the world over and has been so employed for 100 years.

"All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name" was written by Edward Perronet in 1770 and published anonymously in The Gospel Magazine in the following year. All else from the pen of this writer has been forgotten.

"My Soul, Repeat His Praise," is by Isaac Watts. It is one-half of a hymn which he entitled "Mercy In the Midst of Judgment." The other half is the well known hymn beginning, "The pity of the Lord."

"O Might My Lot Be Cast With These" is part of a hymn by Charles Wesley on the primitive church. It had originally 30 verses. Many of Wesley's hymns were very long, some having 40 or 50 stanzas.

"Come, O Thou All Victorious Lord," is by Charles Wesley. It was written for the quarrymen of Portland and contained several allusions to their business, which were readily recognized and heartily appreciated.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

THE FASHION PLATE.

English walking gloves for spring are of finely dressed dogskin or Swedish kid, to wear with promenade costumes.

Pale tinted, inexpensive, but fine quality satins are very greatly favored for fitted blouse waists for evening wear.

The fashionable dress muff, shaped like an hourglass, frilled on each end, affords very little protection to the wrists and hands.

Some of the smartest skating costumes worn this winter are made of plaided or shot velvet, trimmed with bands of seal or Alaska sable.

The beautiful rose tints in evening dress materials this winter are given all the superlative adjectives by admirers of this particular color.

Rose colored chiffon, cream colored Venetian lace and black velvet ribbon compose a symphony of colors and a mixture of fabrics that go to make up the fashionable Queen Anne bertha of the moment.

Plain or beaded black tulle ruches make an effective and very fashionable trimming for dinner toilets of crepon and of light satin or moire. These ruches have the softening effect of feather bands, but are much less expensive.

The lighter shades of Irish poplin make most desirable smart bodices. One of rose pink and silver shot poplin is made with a shower of long and shorter loops of black velvet ribbon falling from the shoulders, with belt trimmings to correspond.—New York Post.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

From our Regular Correspondent.

WASHINGTON, Mar. 8, 1895.

If the new Sibley silver party is not more seriously regarded elsewhere than it is in Washington it will cut no figure whatever in national politics. The executive committee of the Bimetallic League, which is sponsor for the new party and author of the address which announced its birth and the reason therefor, attempted in turn to get the consent of Senator Teller, of Colo., and Cameron, of Pa., to allow the announcement of their names as the Presidential candidate of the new party and upon their refusal it was decided not to nominate, but merely to "suggest" a Presidential candidate. The man suggested was ex-Congressman Sibley, of Pa., an eccentric millionaire who has been republican, democrat and populist all within the lost fifteen years, and who is probably expected to put up the money to maintain the headquarters which are to be opened at once in Washington and kept open if Sibley doesn't get tired of paying the bills until the Presidential election. It was expected by the originators of this party that quite a number of influential democrats and a few republicans would at once announce their endorsement of it, but no such endorsement has been given. On the contrary, even those democrats who are supposed to have had a hand in hatching the new party, such as Bland and Bryan, hastened to give it a black eye by publicly saying they could see no necessity for the organization of a silver party until the democratic national convention shall refuse to declare for free coinage. If the new party has any republicans endorsers they are not known. So far as known the only notable recruits have come from the populists, in the persons of Senator Jones and Stewart, of Nevada but there are several obscure southern democrats in this deal.

Mr. F. W. Bricknell, the Iowa member of the executive committee of the Republican League of the United States, which recently held a meeting in Washington, says of the work of the committee: "Our committee has decided to use every means to make the National league convention at Cleveland, June 19 one that shall not cause any embarrassed to the party. We believe the function of the league is to execute rather than to legislate, and that the convention should avoid any attempt to commit the party in any direction. The convention will last three days, and we shall give the woman all we possibly can. The league always has had a tendency towards the admission of woman to some share in politics, and this convention is likely to be more liberal than the last one. The details of the representation to be given woman have been left to President Tracy, Secretary Humphrey and Mrs. J. Ellen Foster, president of the Woman's Republican Association. Every member of the executive committee was emphatic in saying that the league convention would not boom any man's candidacy for the republican Presidential nomination.

It would be difficult to find an angrier set of men than were the democratic ex-Senators and Representatives, who had hopes of executive favor, when they learned that Mr. Cleveland had left them in the lurch and gone off in search of a good time. Some of them could not control their anger and used words in the presence of private secretary Thurber which probably settled the little chance they had for getting official crumbs from the Presidential table, but the most of them smiled and hid their disappointment as far as possible, and will be on hand when Mr. Cleveland returns.

The names of the 25 democratic members of the last House who signed that manifesto pledging the democratic party to the free coinage of silver at a ratio of 16 to 1 were published this week, although no one seems to know just why, as the number is so ridiculously small when compared with the total democratic membership of the Fifty-third Congress. An amusing feature of it was that the name of Representative McLaurin, of S. C., one of the signers, was published on the same day as one of a committee to select the members of a national committee of the new silver party brought out this week by the Bi-Metallic League. Mr. McLaurin's constituents may soon be wanting to know which party he belongs to, anyway.

AYER'S The only SARSAPARILLA Admitted at the WORLD'S FAIR CHICAGO 1893

Why Was It

that Ayer's Sarsaparilla, out of the great number of similar preparations manufactured throughout the world, was the only medicine of the kind admitted at the World's Fair, Chicago? And why was it that, in spite of the united efforts of the manufacturers of other preparations, the decision of the World's Fair Directors was not reversed?

BECAUSE

According to RULE 15—"Articles that are in any way dangerous or offensive, also patent medicines, nostrums, and empirical preparations, whose ingredients are concealed, will not be admitted to the Exposition," and, therefore—

Because Ayer's Sarsaparilla is not a patent medicine, not a nostrum, and not a secret preparation.

Because its proprietors had nothing to conceal when questioned as to the formula from which it is compounded.

Because it is all that it is claimed to be—a Compound Concentrated Extract of Sarsaparilla, and in every sense, worthy the indorsement of this most important committee, called together for passing upon the manufactured products of the entire world.

Ed. Chapin, who since his return from his visit to the old home at Prattsburgh, N. Y. has been on the sick list and staying with his brother Fred, started for Devils Lake on Tuesday morning. Says he is feeling all right again.

Ben Clements found one of those poison spiders, a tarantula, in a bunch of bananas, and the little fellow was lively as a cricket, and very social—tried to shake hands but Ben wouldn't have it and managed to shake the critter.

The sergeant-at-arms of the house was in the city last week week with subpœnas for witnesses in the Ives impeachment trial, now on before the judiciary committee of the house. Something like twenty of our citizens were on the list and have gone to tell what they know.

Sanderson, the man who was sent to jail last fall for backing an engine into a freight train, causing a smash-up and several thousand dollars expense, was released on Monday. If he had stole a pair of pants he would, no doubt, have been entitled to a year or two longer in the jug.

Dr. M. Leguee is happy once more His better half arrived from a visit to the old home in southern Minnesota. She brought the doctor a handsome pipe, made of the famous pipe-stone, and Doc now thinks he is a "bigger man nor old Grant" with that elegant pipe in his gills.

When coming out of the Congregational church last Sunday morning an attendant was heard to say, "Well, Rev. Fisher's theology don't seem to jibe with Bill Erwin's!" "No," was the significant reply, "I guess he has a different class of clients."

Speaking of Saake's trade Geo. R. Roberts said: "He has a good lot of horses there and in prices are very reasonable. I have sold a number of horses during the past winter and am selling a good many this spring. I find a good demand for good horses while poor ones are not wanted at any price."

D. McMillan brought in some fine baled hay last Saturday and was disgusted at finding only $5 per ton offered for it, when hay in bulk cannot be bought for less. Notwithstanding the scarcity, hay does not seem to bring a fairly remunerative price.

H. Nolan: "I want to say in the Ives impeachment matter that I think the judge has been as fair and impartial in his rulings as any man who ever sat on the bench since I lived in this county and I am somewhat of an old settler myself and am tolerably good judge of—judges. I don't believe the impeachment business will ever go before the senate."

to be deceived; it's annoying to have a poor article of shortening. You can avoid both by seeing that your pail of COTTOLENE bears the trade mark—steer's head in cotton-plant wreath—and be sure of having delicious, healthful food. Other manufacturers try to imitate COTTOLENE, that's the best reason why you want this original article. Look for this trade mark—steer's head in cotton-plant wreath—on every package. S. C. Bagley was down from the woods this week.

S. P. Johnson came in from McIntosh on Tuesday morning.

Mr. Hansen, who bought the Traax farm, arrived from Minneapolis on Wednesday morning to look after things on the farm a bit.

Miss Helen Halvorsen returned from her annual pilgrimage to the shrine of millinery, on Tuesday, and no doubt will have something to say on the subject later.

A man named Youngdahl slipped on the side-walk near the Carman bridge on Tuesday, fell and broke his leg. Dr. Holte reduced the fracture and the city will probably reduce the bill.

A. H. Rankin a well-known brakesman on the Great Northern road, whose home was at Devils Lake, was killed on Saturday night near Minot. He was taking an extra freight from Devils Lake to Minot as its conductor and was last seen by one of the trainmen when the train was within ten miles or so of Minot. He was not missed until the train reached Minot and then an engine was sent in search of him. When found he was lying about 30 feet from the track, so badly hurt that he lived but a short time. From all appearances he had not recovered consiousness since the accident had happened him. It must have been upwards of two hours before he was found and his limbs had commenced to freeze. He leaves a wife and several small children.

Fred Fox, who goes to look up the facilities of the south-land for making a home is one of the old settlers of Polk county coming among the very first settlers. He still retains his farm near St. Hilaire, so that, as soon as he finds out that the south is no place for him he can come back to a home in old Polk county.

Will Arnold: "I want to go on record as predicting an early spring. I think this sort of weather will last until about April 1st then comes the break-up and seeding. I look to see the seeding pretty much all done by May 1st this year and predict the biggest crop the Valley has seen in years."

The Rebeckah entertainment on Tuesday evening was highly enjoyed by all those who were fortunate enough to be there. Quite a bit of excitement was caused by Judge Holt, who was taken with a fainting fit. He soon recovered, however, and was apparently as well as ever.

The Blue Lodge meeting on Thursday evening was a great success—many coming from a distance to attend. Delegates from the Warren lodge to the number of a dozen or so were present, as well as others from other points. Something like 75 Masons sat down to the long table in the banquet hall and discussed a fine collation after the exercises of the evening were over.

J. E. Milton, who was a few years ago proprietor of the Box hotel in this city, died at Wahpeton, N. D. on Thursday morning, March 7th. Mr Milton was a well-known and popular landlord with every commercial traveler on the road. He was of a genial disposition rendering him popular with all with whom he had dealings. He went from this city to Park River, N. D., where in a short time his hotel was destroyed by fire, after which he went to Wahpeton where for several years he has been the landlord of the Merchants hotel, and where he died. He was about 68 years of age.

Jim Fairweather was down from Euclid on Wednesday, after a load of saw dust.

Quite a company, among whom were Alex Thompson, Tommy Johnstone, Mike Palen and others, went down to Fisher on Tuesday evening. They all got back on Wednesday morning on an early train—all but Tommy, and they declared that they had lost him. They report having had a grand good time and declare that the Fisher boys know right well how to entertain.

The dairy meetings in the city this week will be replete with interest to all interested in that line and should be well attended, which no doubt they will be. The shrewd business man neglects no opportunity to post himself on the affairs of his calling and be never rests content with the idea that he already knows it all. So with the progressive farmer. He is always anxious to learn all he can of his business.

Dr. M. LeGuee brought suit against Chas. Teal, Sr., of Euclid, for services as veterinary surgeon and Mr. Teal returned the compliment by bringing the doctor before a justice on a charge of practicing without a diploma. The doctor claimed to have his papers all right enough and was released upon his own recognizance to appear before the justice on Tuesday next. He has been for years recognized as one of the leading veterinarians of Polk County and we are assured that if there is anything wrong in the deal it is simply an oversight in the matter of compliance with the letter of the law. Everybody knows the doctor well; knows that he would not wilfully defraud a customer, nor do a dishonest deed knowingly. The doctor claims to be able to give a reasonable explanation and we believe he can do it.

A Typical American.

We have all heard of "typical American." Some years ago, a celebrated poet, now deceased, described a then president of the United States as a "typical American." Without catechising that characterization, or alluding to any living citizen, mention may be made of one who surely belonged to that class—or perhaps to the better one of "practical Americans." Born in 1702, Benjamin Franklin is as good a type as can be named of that industrious, frugal, commonsense citizen who has made our country what it is. Without illustrious descent or inherited riches, he simply improved all his opportunities. Nor was he a precocious genius—for it was only at 42 that he became known from his experiments in investigating nature of lighting. At 47 he was royal postmaster-general for the colonies; at 60 procured the repeal of the Stamp Act; at 69 was a member of the Colonial congress; at 70 to 79 was minister to France; delegates to the convention which formed our constitution at 81; president of the supreme council of Pennsylvania at 82; and died at 84. Such men have built up our country, whether found at the plow, the forge, in the store, in the legislature, or engaged in great constructive enterprises. Such are the men who have created the great railroad systems of the present, like the Burlington, with seven thousand miles of road, reaching hundreds of communities and putting them in touch with the world, while it transports millions of people swiftly and safely from point to point. For tickets, rates of fares, maps and information call on your home ticket agent, or address W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul, Minn.

EAST GRAND FORKS, March 12, 1895.

Quite a ripple of excitement passed over our unusually quiet burg by the appearance of the sergeant-at-arms of the house with subpœnas for several of our prominent citizens, wanted in the Ives impeachment case.

Mrs. Patrick Murray was unfortunate enough to fall and dislocate her hip last week, inflicting a painful and serious injury.

A. C. Rhinehart's son, Adelbert, who has been sick with typhoid fever, is reported convalescent.

The Comings farm has been purchased by John Driscoll for $3,000 spot cash.

The Salvation Army seems to be doing a rushing business in these days. Have only been here a short time but have more recruits than the army in Crookston have in all the time they have been there.

That old political war-horse, W. W. Wilson, has wintered through in fine shape and is ready for anything that may turn up—political or otherwise. Your Uncle Billy don't say much, but what he don't know of the signs of the times isn't worth much.

Joe Mathews, of your city, paid us a pleasant call last week. Joe is one of the best county officials in the business.

Of course we all went to hear Eugene V. Debs and were all pleased with his appearance and talk. He presented the causes leading up the great strike in a light entirely new to some of of us, and I think some have more sympathy with the Pullman employes than they ever had before. He is a good talker.

OCCASIONAL.

Angus Items.

M. A. Campion took the trouble to move a house out on his farm, last week. Now, another house is becoming to the fields of Angus, and it causes much talk about girls. But people will talk anyway.

It is rumored that Mr. Simmons and wife, who closed out their farming interests in this locality last fall, and drove to Iowa in less than twenty days, will return soon and start farming in Polk county again. Mr. Simmons has undoubtedly found that worse farming localities exist than those of northern Minnesota.

Mr. and Mrs. Perkins entertained a number of their young friends, Friday evening. A right royal good time is reported.

Mrs. Edgar, of Warren, was the guest of R. King, last week.

The many Angus friends of Dr. J. S. Chapin will be grieved to learn that he was called to the bed side of his very sick brother, Bert Chapin, of Michigan, last week.

The late snow promotes sleighing which will be much appreciated by those who have much driving to do.

W. Lemen went to Crookston Thursday evening and returned Friday morning.

There is much talk, grounded on an article published in the Times to the effect that a Mrs. Levi Lake was seen shopping on the streets of Crookston, last week. Now if it had been during the recent warm spell we would have believed it, but not now as Levi is staying home daytime.

J. T. Montgomery, W. L. Davies, and F. McLennon were among the Angus citizens who visited the county seat last week.

Deputy Sheriff Johnson was up from Crookston last week, on official business.

A majority of the Angus young people were entertained at the home of Mr. Fred Stevens, Saturday evening, and an all round good time is reported.

Edward Stevens is expecting to leave home soon for Wabasha, where he will accept a position as engineer on a steamboat for the summer.

W. Lemen was summoned to appear on the Ives case. He will start for St. Paul Wednesday night. Ex.

Will be sold at a bargain to one purchaser or divided if required. For full particulars address Wm. Cunningham or the JOURNAL office, Crookston, Minn. (28-tf) receive constant and special attention. Among topics recently discussed are:

"Woman Suffrage in Practice"; "The Renaissance of Woman"; "Woman in Politics"; "The New Aspect of the Woman Question" and "The Modern Girl," by the author of "The Heavenly Twins"; "The Future of Marriage"; "Evils of Early Marriages"; "The Servant Girl of the Future"; "The Financial Dependence of Women"; "Trades-Unions for Women"; "The Lack of Good Servants"; "American Life and Physical Deterioration"; "Good and Bad Mothers"; "The Tyranny of the Kitchen"; "The Amateur Nurse"; Mark Twain's Defense of Harriet Shelley, etc., etc.

A New Feature for 1895.

The REVIEW will publish in 12 chapters, beginning with the January number, the

Personal History of the Second Empire,

a historical work of unsurpassed importance, which will throw a flood of light upon the chequered career of Napoleon III, and the influences which led to the collapse of his Empire in the gigantic struggle with united Germany under Wilhelm I, and his Iron Chancellor. It is as fascinating as a romance, being richly anecdotal and full of information drawn from sources hitherto inaccessible, presented in the graphic and vivacious style which "The Englishman in Paris," by the same author, has made familiar to thousands of our readers.

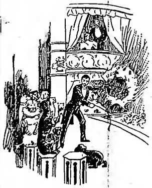
A Hard Pull.

A Massachusetts official who spent several years in Kentucky tells the story of a judge somewhat given to bibulosity. After a night with the boys the judge was considerably "how come you so," and for a lark the mischief lovers reversed the wheels on his honor's old cradle shape wagon, putting the fore wheels behind and the hind wheels in front, thus raising the fore part of the wagon to an unwonted eminence. When he reached home, near morning, his wife naturally wanted to know where he had been all night. He explained by saying in uncertain tones:

"Maria, I've been to Louisville. I started in good season, but it was ten miles and up hill all the way."—Boston Transcript.

Speaking of Resemblances.



Greyhound—What made you perform your act so poorly just now?

Poodle—Aw, weally! The sight of that spurious counterpart of myself in the upper box wobbed me of all self possession.—Truth.

What Was Wrong.

If there was not something strange about Eddie's actions that evening, there was still something a little out of the ordinary. He had been to school as usual and had looked a little tired when he came home. He ate very little supper and was ready to go to bed at an unusually early hour. All these things were noticed by his mother, who wondered what could be wrong. His habit was to invariably oppose any and every attempt toward putting him to bed. Was there something wrong on his mind? his mother mused, but rocked in her chair by his side, content to steal a glance at him occasionally when he sat listlessly, with folded hands, looking into the fire.

"Are you sick, darling?" she asked after a long silence.

"No."

"What?"

"No, ma'am, I ain't sick."

"Are you in a bad humor, my boy?"

A long silence.

"Did anything go wrong today with you, pet?"

Perhaps it was the tender tone of her voice, or maybe that divining mother had hit perchance on the magic sesame that opened the secret doors to a heart full of woe. Whatever it was, a great big tear rose in his eye, that overflowed and ran down his cheek. Quickly brushing it away, as if ashamed, he knit his brows and glared at the fire. Presently, with an expression of a different sort upon his face, he said:

"I gave him a swipe in the nose I bet he will remember."

"Who?"

"Bill Kellum."

"Why did you do that?"

"Well, you see, mamma, we was comin out of the schoolyard on a run, an Bill Kellum tripped me up. I didn't fall very hard, though. Pshaw! Didn't hurt a little bit. Only skinned my knee a little, an then I made fer him. 'Fore I caught up he was 'way down street, an as I kem on him he turn roun, an I gev him a rouster in the nose jes' like that—biff!" and Eddie caught the blow in his left hand.

"What did he do then?" queried his mother, but a silence fell on the little fellow, and the tears were beginning to flow once more, when of a sudden, with the courage of a true warrior, he straightened up and answered, "He licked me!"—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Winding It Up.

Stockholder—You are the receiver appointed to wind up the affairs of the Busball company, I believe.

Lawyer—Yes, sir.

"What are the prospects?"

"Well, things looked very gloomy for awhile, but they are brightening up now."

"Ah, I am glad to hear that!"

"Yes, make yourself easy. There is little doubt now that we can realize enough out of it to pay my salary."—New York Weekly.

Horrible.

"Did ye ever hear of dese priests in India," said Reginald de Bumm, "dat sticks needles through dere cheeks an burns dere skin jes' fur fun?"

"Dat ain't nothin," replied Clarence Fitz Hantheau. "I knowed a man dat took a bath every day 'cause he said he liked it!"—Washington Star.

A Personal Remark.

"Come, sinner, halt and hesitate no longer," shouted the great exhorter. "Seek the straight and narrow path."

My Wife is Nervous

Says many a man and too often he is inclined to blame the poor, tired woman who cannot eat or sleep. whose whole life is filled with misery because her blood has become impoverished and her nervous system exhausted. She needs a building up medicine like Hood's Sarsaparilla. A few bottles will enrich and vitalize her blood, tone and strengthen her digestive organs, give her a good appetite, enable her to sleep soundly, banish her nervousness and bring back her smiles. Mr. J. W. Roberson, of Greenfield, Tenn., says: "My wife began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla about three months ago and she is now taking her third bottle. She has been in poor health for fifteen years. Hood's Sarsaparilla is doing her more good than any other medicine she has ever taken. Her appetite is better, she looks better and there has been improvement in every way."

DO YOU Want to be cured by the great specialist? Dr. A. L. Cole, so well and favorably known throughout the Northwest by his long residence and successful practice in this city, continues to cure all Nervous Chronic and Private diseases of both sexes. His name is a sufficient guarantee of prompt and perfect cure of every case he undertakes.

PLAIN TO HER.

They Might Deceive Other People, but She Was Aware of Them.

There are times when Macallister McIlhenny is a creature of impulse, and he has been known to drop half a week's salary on a sudden notion that the gray horse with the black tail, among a dozen entries, would come under the wire first. Very likely that horse would not get in until all the field had arrived, but it made no difference to Mac as soon as he recovered from the shock, and he was willing to risk fate at the next opportunity. So in other matters, not the least of which were affairs of the heart.

On this occasion, Macallister McIlhenny had put his salary on the maiden stakes in November and lost, and like the rash youth he was, he had gone in again on a December pool. He ought to have known better. Any man ought to know better than to defy fate every 30 days. Still, some men never do, hence the skeletons that litter the path of the emotions. With a wild rush, Macallister McIlhenny had gone at the beautiful and accomplished Miss Montmorenci—think of a woman going through her married life as Mrs. Montmorenci Macallister McIlhenny and shudder, though Mac never thought of it—and that rather imperturbable young woman was almost agitated by his impetuosity.

He had only called twice, and on the third call he had taken the bit in his teeth.

"Oh, Mabel," he said to her as he fell upon his knees, "though I have known you but a few short and blissful days, I feel that all my life should be yours, and here, upon my bended knee, as a knight of old, I offer it all to thee."

He held out his hands to her, oh, so pleadingly, but she did not fly to him. On the contrary, she stopped to catch her breath.

"Mr. McIlhenny," she gasped as she gazed upon him, with scorn, "you are a donkey."

Macallister McIlhenny recoiled until he was almost sitting on the floor.

"A donkey?" he murmured helplessly, as if he failed to comprehend. "A donkey? Do my ears deceive me?"

She laughed with strident harshness.

"Well," she responded, "I don't know whether they do or not, but I can tell you right here that they don't deceive me one particle."

Then she turned imperiously and left Macallister McIlhenny in his deep dejection.—Detroit Free Press.

"Debt," said Mr. Slowpay, reading the congressional news, "is the great benefactor and moral and financial teacher of man"—

Mrs. Slowpay—Debt! Teacher? Ichabod, are you crazy?

"Not a bit of it, dear. You see, it's like this"—

"Oh, fudge on your nonsense! You're as cranky as"—

"I can prove my theory, my dear."

"Well, I'll waste two minutes' time hearing you. Go ahead!"

"Well, my dear, if there was no financial obligation to be met in the present, there would be no financial promise for the future. See?"

And Mr. Slowpay took the last grocer's bill and solemnly lit a cigar with it.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Somewhat Cold.

"It does git a little cold out in Kansas," said the man from the prairies, "but in Manitoba is where it really gits its work in. Up there one winter it got so cold that I nigh starved to death."

"So cold that all the grub froze solid?" asked the man who has never been 30 miles from home.

"Oh, that's a regular thing. But this time it got so cold that the cold drawed up the skin of my neck so tight that I couldn't swaller nothin. Ef they hadn't of come a thaw, I allow I wouldn't be here today to tell about it."—Cincinnati Tribune.

Result of Experience.

"Can you tell me what is good for a cold?" asked the individual with a frog in his throat.

"I have tried many things," replied the trifler, "but I don't know that there is anything more sure than sitting with wet feet with the temperature in the neighborhood of zero."—Boston Transcript.

SURROUNDED BY MYSTERY!

A Great Mistake.

A recent discovery is that headache dizziness, dullness, confusion of the mind etc., are due to derangement of the nerve centers which supply the brain with nerve force; that indigestion, dyspepsia, neuralgia wind in stomach, etc., arise from the derangement of the nerve centers supplying these organs with nerve fluid or force. This is likewise true of many diseases of the heart and lungs. The nerve system is like a telegraph system as will be seen by the accompanying cut. The little white lines are the nerves which convey the nerve force from the nerve centers to every part of the body, just as the electric current is conveyed along the telegraph wires to every station, large or small. Ordinary physicians fail to regard this fact; instead of treating the nerve centers for the cause of the disorders arising therefrom they treat the part affected.

Franklin Miles, M. D., LL. B., the highly celebrated specialist and student of nervous diseases, and author of many noted treatises on the latter subject long since realized the truth of the first statement, and his Restorative Nervine is prepared on that principle. Its success in curing all diseases arising from derangement of the nervous system is wonderful, as the thousands of unsolicited testimonials in possession of the company manufacturing the remedy amply prove.

Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine is a reliable remedy for all nervous diseases, such as headache, nervous debility, prostration, sleeplessness, dizziness hysteria, sexual debility, St. Vitus dance, epilepsy, etc. It is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or sent direct by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid.

TWENTY-NINTH BIENNIAL SESSION

Tuesday, March 5.

SENATE—Senator Spencer's valued policy bill caused a long and heated discussion. The bill provides that insurance companies shall pay the face of a policy where property is entirely destroyed by fire, and shall pay the total loss where there is but a partial destruction, provided the amount shall not exceed the face of the policy. It passed—32 to 23.

Several minor measures also passed.

HOUSE.—The appropriation of $250,000 for immediate use on the new capitol building at St. Paul was defeated in the house in committee of the whole. The discussion lasted all the afternoon. Mr. Mr. Jacobson moved to strike out section 1, providing for the transfer of the $250,000 and in support said the $250,000 would not be needed, and in any event none of it was needed this year, as the work on the plans must be done over again. When a vote was reached the amendment was carried by a vote of 59 to 49.

Zier's patent medicine bill was indefinitely postponed. The Kenyon impeachment resolution the house refused to take up.

Wednesday, March 6.

SENATE—The senate spent most of the day's session on general orders. For the reason that probably at no time was there a quorum present, only bills of minor importance could be acted on.

Attorney General Childs has sent to the senate his opinion concerning the constitutionality of the bill providing an appropriation for continuing drainage work in the Red River valley. The decision is against the appropriation. If it can be shown that the drainage is necessary as a sanitary measure, in order to preserve the health of the people, or if it is made as a result of a land grant, the constitution will not be violated. But in the judgment of Mr. Childs the legislature cannot use the sanitary idea as a subterfuge, and proceed to drain thousands of acres of railroad land and land owned by individuals in order to drain a few acres of its own. This will probably kill the drainage bill in the senate.

HOUSE—The house adjourned shortly after 11 a. m. for want of a quorum.

Thursday, March 7.

SENATE—The capitol bill went through the senate during the afternoon by a vote of 41 to 12. This is the house bill, from which was eliminated the provision providing for an immediate appropriation for erecting the new building.

There were but two bills on the calendar, and these were given their passage without opposition. One of the bills was one of the most important that has come before the legislature this year, Senator Wyman's bill revising the laws relating to banks of discount and deposit. The other bill was also an important one, being Senator Stevens' arbitration measure, providing for settlement of differences between employers and employes, and creating boards of conciliation.

HOUSE—The house confined itself very strictly to routine. Little else was done than to take up the calendar, and pass a few bills, among them one to establish the office of state entomologist.

Friday, March 8.

SENATE—The senate was in session until 6 o'clock, and disposed of a large amount of business. There were several protracted debates. The report of the judiciary committee recommending the indefinite postponement of the Anderson bill to tax railroad lands was presented at the morning session and warmly discussed. The bill was finally made a special order for Monday at 2:30.

In committee of the whole the bill for a fourth hospital for the insane was recommended to pass. The question of location was left to a commission.

Among the other bills recommended was Keller's cyclone relief bill for Stearns county; a bill to prohibit the sale of decayed or tainted poultry, and a bill to exempt engineers from jury duty.

The bill to sell the site for a state elevator at Duluth was killed.

HOUSE—In committee of the whole H. F. 264, to prevent and punish combinations to control the price of food products, was discussed at length. It was finally referred to the lawyers of the house to pass judgment on its legality.

Saturday, March 9.

SENATE—The senate disposed of a large number of bills pending on general orders. Among them it recommended for passage Senator Keller's two bills relating to adulterated spices and baking powders. Also the house bill providing for a rebate of $2 road tax for every broad-tire wagon used by farmers.

Representative Vogel's temperance bill, forbidding a saloon within 1,500 feet of a schoolhouse, except in villages and cities, was recommended for passage. Also, S. F. 320, to allow boards of education to elect one of their number treasurer, and S. F. 25, providing for the establishing of section or property lines in any township in the state at the expense of the property affected.

Senator Hodge secured the passage of a resolution asking Attorney General Childs to give his opinion upon the legal effect of the passage of H. F. 1, the bill to tax unoccupied railroad lands.

The bill to amend sec. 7, chap. 6, general statutes of 1878, relating to the deposit of state funds; creating a board consisting of the governor, auditor and secretary of state, to designate state depositories was passed.

HOUSE—Not in session.

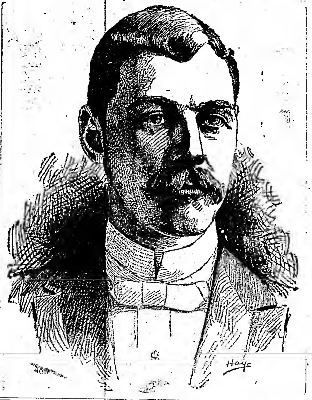
Monday, March 11.

SENATE—House File 1, the bill proposing a constitutional amendment for the purpose of placing on the tax rolls all unused lands owned by railroads in this state, was considered by the senate in committee of the whole, and the most interesting debate of the session was had. The bill was a special order and the debate continued until 6 o'clock without action.

Senator Sheehan asked that his home rule bill for cities be made a special order for Wednesday. Several senators objected but the request was finally granted.

S. F. 346 was recommended for passage. It provides for the examination and commitment of inebriates to the special department for the treatment of the insane in the Rochester state hospital.

HOUSE—The house held a short afternoon session and little business was transacted. In committee of the whole Mr. Cant's bill relating to fees of clerks of court was recommended to pass. S. F. 349, to reimburse Professor Otto Lugger for money expended in exterminating chinch bugs, also received favorable action. The bill of Mr. Warner, to regulate the practice of embalming and creating a state board of embalming, was strongly opposed and recommended for indefinite postponement.



were 12 men carefully selected—men of honest and sound judgment. Each one, without reference to the opinion of his fellows, so I understand, has held you guilty. In the judgment of the court this was a fair and honest verdict. It is with feelings of the greatest pain that I now pass sentence upon you as the law provides. It is that you be taken to the county jail of Hennepin county and there confined until after a period of three months, at a time to be fixed by the governor of this state, you be taken to the place of execution and there hanged by the neck until you are dead."

WASTED NO TIME.

The Hayward Jury Was Out Only Three Hours.

MINNEAPOLIS, March 9.—The jury's verdict in the famous Hayward case was reached in less than three hours, quick work considering the length of time occupied in presenting the evidence and making the arguments. Only two ballots were necessary, the first stood eleven for conviction and one for acquittal and the second was unanimous for a verdict of guilty. The case has been on trial since Jan. 21, and has aroused intense interest throughout the country. This interest in Minneapolis has been something wonderful. It has, in fact, been the only topic since the trial began. The verdict is eminently satisfactory to the public in general and especially so to the crowd that has hung about the outside of the courtroom. That this is so is apparent from the expressions that have been voiced from time to time, ending in the demonstration made when Hayward was led back to the jail after the verdict.

Under similar circumstances a cooler man than Harry Hayward when he entered the courtroom to hear the verdict of the jury never lived. His dress was immaculate, as usual, and he walked with the same cultivated stride that is one of his characteristics, to the chair he has occupied for so many weeks past. That he anticipated what the verdict was to be seemed apparent in the angry manner with which he threw his hat on the attorney's table. The force was so great that a rent was made in the crown of the derby.

Shumaker turned to his client and besought him to keep cool, whatever the verdict.

"Don't show any temper, Harry," he said. "This is not the time to do that."

The injunction had the desired effect. Hayward straightened out the sleeves of his well-fitting coat, sat down, crossed his legs and faced the jurors. He was breathing so heavily that every breath was almost a gasp, but the passage from the jail to the court room was through a hostile and desperate crowd and it was hurriedly made. He sat there amid the solemn silence of the big room, scanning the faces of his 12 countrymen, one by one, as if to learn in advance whether any ray of hope

Lurked Behind Their Impassiveness.

The jurymen looked stern and sad. The story they had to tell could be read in their faces, and Hayward knew his fate before a word had been spoken. No spectators were admitted. The only persons present when the verdict was handed in were police officers, sheriff's deputies and reporters, besides the judge and clerks. Outside a howling, anxious mob awaited the news, and awaited it with ghoulish impatience.

When Judge Smith arrived, he issued strict orders to admit no one, and the injunction was religiously observed.

Kobler, the deputy clerk, asked in a tremulous voice whether the jury had agreed upon a verdict, and Neil McNeil, the foreman, stood up. His face was ghastly in its color, and there was not a man on the jury unaffected by the intense gravity of the situation. Timberlake's dark eyes shone like sloes from his ashen visage, and even the farmer members were visibly horrified with the stern duty devolving upon them.

They Had Agreed.

"We have agreed," said McNeil, in a voice that was scarcely audible, and the folded piece of paper that meant life or death to the accused was handed to the clerk. Judge Smith looked over the document first and returned it to Deputy Clerk Kobler.

"We, the jury, find the prisoner guilty," he read. Every eye was turned toward the condemned man. There was nothing in his face to indicate that he had heard a word of it. He threw his head back as the word "guilty" was pronounced, but it was only to adjust his collar band. He did not change color by a single shade. Twice he coughed—that strange, hard, metallic cough that has been heard so often in the last few weeks. Then looking around at the crowd he raised his eyebrows inquiringly as though to ask: "What next?"

During the polling of the jury, he listened with evident interest to the answers, though what they might be could signify nothing to him. The expression in his face was one of indignation rather than any other sentiment. Judge Smith then voiced his thanks to the jury for their labors in connection with the case.

Thought It an Outrage.

When the court announced that sentence would be deferred until Monday morning, Hayward was evidently pleased. He expressed the opinion, while being removed from the court room, that the verdict was an outrage, and that he was a long way from the hangman yet.

Had a Strong Guard.

At 2:45 Hayward was taken down down stairs and led back to jail under a police guard.

In the belief that trouble might occur if the verdict exonerated Hayward, a force of determined officers had been detailed to duty in the courtroom and vicinity. An immense crowd awaited the prisoner's coming. He grinned at the mob as it pushed forward over the pavement toward him, and it is doubtful whether Harry Haward would have regretted an opportunity to mix matters with some of the noisiest. He was taken across the street on a dog trot, with the yelling multitude at his heels.

"Good bye Harry, old [illegible]," cried one man at the top of his voice.

"You're a dead duck."

"Not yet," said Hayward, loud enough to be heard in a radius of 20 feet. "Not quite a dead duck yet."

Matters looked threatening for a time. The officers massed around their prisoner determinedly, and there would have been serious trouble had any effort been made of attack. The entrance of the jaill was at last reached and a side dodge sent a dozen members of the crowd flying in different directions. Whatever the demonstration may have meant it resulted in nothing. Hayward was safely lodged in his call.

THE JUDGES CHARGE.

Attorneys for Both Sides Satisfied With the Instructions Given.

The judge in his charge instructed the jury of the manner in which the evidence was to be received and what weight might be accorded it under the aspects from which the jury might view such evidence.

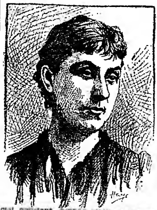
Especial stress was laid on the injunction that no weight must be attached by the jury to statements made by attorneys on either side of the case, except so far as they were based on the evidence. The jury had a right to consider whether or not any of the witnesses had testified through motives of enmity for the accused, and also whether any witnesses had been induced to testify as they had done under promise of immunity from punishment, and to weigh such considerations in deciding on a verdict. There must be conviction of guilt beyond a reasonable doubt in the minds of the jury before a verdict of guilty could be returned.

There were no exceptions to the charge. The lawyers on the side of the defense expressed themselves as entirely satisfied with the fairness and clearness of the document.

CHARGED WITH PERJURY.

Witnesses Grindall and Miss Wachtler Are Under Arrest.

MINNEAPOLIS, March 9.—Shortly after 6 o'clock George Grindall and Maggie Wachter, two of the most important witnesses put upon the stand by the defense in the Hayward case, were arrested, the former by Inspector Hankinson and the latter by Inspectors Hoy and Lawrence, on warrants sworn out by Blixt's attorney, and in which appeared the fine Italian hand of the special assistant county attorney. Miss Wachter's release was secured later by John Day Smith, one of the attorneys for the defense.



HOPES FOR A NEW TRIAL.

Erwin Would Have the Hayward Case Tried Outside of Minneapolis.

MINNEAPOLIS, March 11.—The Hayward trial is still occupying public attention to a very large extent. The chances of an order for a new trial from the supreme court are being discussed, and there is a very general opinion that the verdict will stand. W. W. Erwin, who made the long legal fight for Hayward's life, expresses himself as confident of success either in securing a new trial or through an appeal to the supreme court. "I have very little to say," said Erwin. "I am simply surprised at the outcome of the trial and at the arrest of Miss Wachter and George Grindall. I believe the jurors are men of unimpeachable character and consequently their verdict was a conscientious one. I still hold to Harry's innocence and that he Will Be Able to Demonstrate It.

I have hopes of doing that. My theory now is just as it has been, that the deep, d——d atrocity of this murder forces the public demand for a victim, and that slight evidence has only been demanded to convict any man under suspicion, unless such man could advance some affirmative defense, which would clear up the as yet mysterious mannerisms of this murder. Harry's conduct at receiving the verdict is a startling confirmation of his innocence."

The case now, he says, will take the usual course. He will move for a new trial, and if refused, will carry the matter to the supreme court. In case a new trial is ordered, an effort will be made to secure the trial in some country district, where the people have not had free access to the daily papers.

MISS VEDDER'S STORY.

Had She Given It Hayward's Case Would Not Have Been Helped.

MANKATO, Minn., March 11.—The Hayward verdict gives general satisfaction. Miss Vedder, the young lady whose name was prominently mentioned during the trial, but who carefully remained away while it was in progress in order not to testify, passed through the city on her return to Minneapolis from Iowa. Now that the trial is over she talks quite freely of the matter. A well known Minneapolis contractor who has known her for 10 years had a long conversation with her on the train, which he gives substantially as follows:

Wouldn't Have Helped Hayward.

"Miss Vedder, had she been called upon to testify, would have made a statement somewhat damaging to Harry Hayward's side of the case. She and Miss Ging were with Harry on the night of the holdup in April. He tried hard during the evening to sell first to her and then to Miss Ging a diamond ring worth $150 for $75. When the party was held up Harry made no attempt at selfdefense, but took the matter coolly. The robber was not Adry Hayward, but a much smaller man, and held a revolver in one hand while he went through Harry pockets. Miss Vedder believes that Harry knew of the holdup; that the robber was his accomplice and that the intention was to steal back the ring after it had been bought and paid for.

Coit Sustained.

COLUMBUS, O., March 11.—The Ohio National Guard military commission appointed by Governor McKinley to inquire into the shooting of certain citizens at Washington courthouse, by Ohio troops under command of Colonel Alonzo B. Coit, while defending a negro prisoner from being lynched, sustains Coit. Governor McKinley has indorsed the report.

Swallowed Coin and Died.

FALL RIVER, Mass., March 12.—Patrick Sullivan, aged 59, met with death from an extraordinary cause. About 9 o'clock he went to bed with three pieces of money in his mouth. When his wife went to wake him in the morning his body was cold and he had probably been dead several hours. Sullivan had swallowed a half dollar, a quarter and a nickel.

HOPES ARE BLASTED

No Longer Any Doubt as to the Fate of the Cruiser Reina Regente.

DISCOVERED BY ALFONSO XII

Which Has Returned With Divers to Recover Bodies of the Crew.

CADIZ, March 20. — The Spanish cruiser Alfonso XII has returned here after a search for the missing cruiser Reina Regente and reports having found the latter vessel sunk near Bajo Acientaos, not far from the straits of Gibraltar. The Alfonso XII has returned to the scene of the wreckers with a number of divers and diving appliances in order to recover the crew of the sunken warship.

The Reina Regente was reported missing on March 13. She had just conveyed from Cadiz to Tangier the returning Moorish mission to Spain. The cruiser left Taugiet on March 10 for Cadiz and her whereabouts have not heretofore been definitely ascertained. Pieces of one of her boats and semaphore flags were reported to have been picked up along the shore near Ceuta and Tarifa. She carried a crew of 420 officers and men, and all hands are believed to have perished.

POLICEMEN UNDER ARREST.

Names of Gotham Coppers Indicted by the Grand Jury.

NEW YORK, March 20.—All the police officials against whom indictments were found Monday by the extraordinary grand jury, were placed under arrest when they went to police headquarters in the morning. The indicted men are:

Inspector William McLaughlin.

Captain Jacob Seibert, of the Union Market station.

Captain J. J. Donohue, West Twentieth street station.

Captain M. J. Murphy, West One Hundredth street station.

Captain James K. Price, McDougal street station.

Former Police Captain William S. Devery.

Wardman Edward Clenner (dismissed.)

Wardman Edward S. Hill (formerly under Captain Price.)

Wardman Burns (jumped his bail.)

Captain John T. Stevenson and ex-Wardman J. J. Coahan.

Superintendent Byrnes said that there was a warrant for still another man formerly connected with the police force. This man did not arrive at police headquarters with the rest and the superintendent refused to give his name.

Superintendent Byrnes said that the indictments which had been handed to him were all that had been found.

Visibly Affected.

Inspector William McLaughlin was the first called to the bar. The inspector, pale, and trembling visibly, was addressed by the clerk, who said:

"There are fire indictments against you."

The justice was handed the papers in the case, and upon the recommendation of District Attorney Fellows, the bail was fixed at $20,000. The bail on the first charge was fixed at $10,000, and on each of the other four at $2,500. The bail in the case of John J. Donohue was fixed at $2,500; Michael J. Murphy, $10,000; ex-Captain William Devery's bail was fixed at $10,000. In the case of ex-Captain John T. Stephenson, no warrant was issued, as he is now under $25,000 bail, pending a new trial for bribery.

Big Vermont Mills Burned.

BURLINGTON, Vt., March 20.—A disastrous fire broke out in the wood working shops of J. R. Booth. The Pioneer lumber mills were destroyed and the flames spread to the large storehouse and works of the Baldwin refrigerator works and to the shops of the Vermont Roller Shade company, and practically wiped out those buildings. The total loss is estimated at $300,000.

Nephew of Governor Larrabee Missing.

CHICAGO, March 20.—Christopher W. Larrabee, nephew of ex-Governor Larrabee of Iowa, and cashier and head accountant for Boyd, Stickney & Co., wholesale coal dealers, is missing, and if all accounts are true, his books do not balance by $20,000 or $25,000. His employers and detectives have been looking for him since last Thursday.

Robbed the Homestake Company.

DEADWOOD, S. D., March 20.—Nasby and Jayles Street and Mrs. Alexander Street have been arrested charged with stealing gold amalgam from the Homestake mills. The men were employed in the mill and are said to have secured over $5,000 worth of the precious metal, the stealing lasting over a period of three years.

An Advance of 16 Per Cent.

UNIONTOWN, Pa., March 20.—Notices have been posted at all the coke works of W. J. Rainey, stating that an increase of 16 per cent in wages had been granted to all grades of labor. The new scale went into effect Monday morning. The employes of this company are now receiving higher wages than are paid at any other works in the region.

CARRIERS COMBINE

POSTOFFICE EMPLOYES ORGANIZING FOR LARGER SALARIES.

The Authorities Do Not Like It Because of the Bad Effect on Discipline—Carrier at Youngstown, O., Dismissed for Alleged Agitating.

WASHINGTON, March 19.—The postoffice department has information of the formation of a powerful combination of postal employes, designed to bring pressure upon congress to overturn certain regulations and rules of the department. The employes have been encouraged by success in attaching to the last postoffice appropriation bill an amendment which suspended an order of the department. This order was issued last June and directed that by May 1, 1895, all railway mail service employes should remove to some point along the line of the route on which he was employed. This was unsatisfactory to some of the clerks and they obtained legislation overruling the order. The reason for issuing the order is explained at the department as necessary because at the time the order was issued there were about 1,300 of the 7,000 in the service who did not live on the lines where they worked. When there was an accident or anything else those who were on leave and away from the line where they worked escaped the extra duty and it fell upon those living on the route. Of the 1,300 who were living off the lines where they worked, all but about 300 have notified the department that they have or will remove their homes to where requested. Probably all of them will so remove, notwithstanding the legislation overruling the order. The department is now informed that since the failure of legislation in the last congress increasing the pay of employes, a combination has been formed to pass this legislation and also to overturn orders and rules of the department which are unsatisfactory to them. A high official of the department said:

That Required Emergency Men,

A Powerful Combination.

"This combination includes some thousands of employes in the railway mail service, the letter carriers' service and in postoffices. They are all in the classified service and protected from removal. The aggregate amount of the increase demanded is about $5,000,000. That, perhaps, is not of so much importance as the effect on the discipline of the department and the efficiency of the service.

"These employes, numbering about 30,000, by a contribution of $5 each, would reap a fund of $150,000 for the maintenance of a lobby. The effect of this combination would be to create a sentiment against the civil service law which protects these employes. How formidable the combination may become is a matter of conjecture, but the whole affair is the result of congress legislating to overturn the rules and regulations of the department, as affecting its employes."

AGITATOR IN UNIFORM.

Youngstown, O., Letter Carrier Discharged for Conspiracy.

WASHINGTON, March 19.—Assistant Postmaster General Jones has ordered the dismissal of a letter carrier at Youngstown, O. An inspector had made a report on the case and the carrier was charged with conspiracy in trying to defeat the order of the postmaster general making regulations preventing overtime charges. It was learned that the Youngstown carrier had taken advantage of leave of absence to go to Canton, and was about to perfect an organization of letter carriers, so they would stand by each other and prevent the discharge of any man for any cause whatever.

Mr. Jones says that combinations among employes of this kind will not be tolerated.

NOT VESTED RIGHT.

Important Supreme Court Decision Regarding Pensions to Vets.

WASHINGTON, March 19.—An interesting opinion upon the status of pensions has been delivered by Justice Brewer. "Congress being at liberty to give or withhold pensions," said the justice, "may prescribe who shall receive, and determine all the circumstances and conditions under which any application therefor shall be prosecuted. No man has a legal right to a pension, and no man has a legal right to interfere in the matter of obtaining pensions for himself or others. The whole control of the matter is within the domain of congressional power."

This declaration was incidental to the court's opinion upon the appeal of Henry N. Frieble, who was convicted under an indictment charging that he demanded a greater sum than $10 for prosecuting a pension claim.

Deal in Minnesota Gold Lands.

DULUTH, March 20.—A $250,000 deal in Seine river gold property has just been consummated. Several Eastern capitalists have purchased 80 sections of the Kelly, Mosier & Campbell, and the Bartlett & Knauff properties and will at once begin work developing the mines, which are said to be the richest yet discovered. Among the men interested are J. J. McIntyre of Niagara, N. Y., and W. B. Pelton and J. S. Potts of Appleton, Wis.

AN ULTIMATUM FROM ENGLAND.

Nicaragua Must Pay Indemnity for the Bluefields Affair.

MANAGUA, Nicaragua, March 19.—The British government, through its minister here, has submitted an ultimatum to Nicaragua. It demands a cash indemnity of £15,000 as smart money to pay for the expulsion of Mr. Hatch, British consular agent at Bluefields, during the troubles there last year, and also the appointment of a commission to adjudicate the damages sustained by the persons and property of British subjects who were expelled from the Mosquito reservation about the same time. By the terms of the ultimatum Great Britain is to name one of the commissioners and Nicaragua another, and these two are to choose a third who shall not be a citizen of the United States. It was also made known that a British warship is now on her way to Nicaragua to enforce these demands, which must be complied with within seven weeks from Feb. 25 last, the date of the ultimatum.

Heard at Washington.

WASHINGTON, March 19.—It is impossible to learn positively whether the state department has been fully advised officially of the severe demands made upon Nicaragua by Great Britain, as reported in the cable dispatches from Managua, but it is assumed that our own government is fully posted in regard to the matter. It cannot be denied that this new incident, taken in connection with the hostile attitude of Great Britain towards our sister republic of Venezuela, promises to lead to trouble of a character much more serious than the little incident of the Allianca, which has caused such a commotion.

It leaves Minneapolis and St. Paul for Chicago every night in the year.—The Traveler, San Francisco.

The appointments of that Rolling Palace—the North-Western Limited—are the most complete, comfortable and superb that any railway in this Great America has yet offered the public.—The Decorator, Minneapolis, Minn.

THE SCHOONER SUNK

ANOTHER OUTRAGE AGAINST THE UNITED STATES.

Charged to a Spanish Gunboat—Report Says That the Vessel Lost Had a Crew of Sixteen—The News Is as Yet Unconfirmed at Washington.

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., March 19.—A special to The Florida Citizen from Key West, Fla., says: A letter has been received here from Cuba stating that the Spanish gunboat Alcedo fired upon and sank a supposed American schooner off Puerto Padre with 16 people. It is rumored that the schooner was from Key West. The schooner Golden Hind of Key West, which left here several weeks ago for a cargo of fruit with a crew of 16 men, had to pass Puerto Padre, and may have been the vessel in question. The schooners Louise Hastings and Lilly also sailed for fruit several days ago, but neither had 16 men in their crew.

The latest news from Cuba is that the government has captured a schooner loaded with arms and ammunition at Havana, which was to go to Santiago de Cuba. At Santa Clara several rifles were captured hidden away in fields.

Fired on an English Vessel.

NEW YORK, March 19.—A special cable to The World from Havana says: The commander of the Spanish cruiser Corde de Veaedito reports having fired on a steamship flying the English flag. Two blank shots were fired first and then two with balls. It is presumed here that the cruiser was mistaken in the nationality of the flag and that the steamer fired upon was the Allianca.

Not Heard at Washington.

WASHINGTON, March 19.—Nothing whatever is known here of reports published in the New York Herald, under a Key West date that a Spanish gunboat had fired on an unknown American vessel off the Cuban coast. Dispatches to the Associated Press from Key West contained no mention of any such occurrence, and there is no Spanish war vessel of the name given, the Arcado.

MUST APOLOGIZE.

Spain Called Down by Gresham for the Allianca Affair.

MADRID, March 16.—The following cablegram has been received here:

"Taylor, Minister, Madrid: This department is informed that on the 8th inst. the United States mail steamship Allianca, on her homeward voyage from Colon to New York, when six miles from the coast of Cuba, off Cape Maysi, was repeatedly fired upon by a Spanish gunboat, with solid shot, which, fortunately, fell short. The windward passage where this occurred is the natural and usual highway for vessels plying between ports of the United States and the Caribbean sea. Through it several regular lines of American mail and commercial steamers pass weekly, within sight of Cape Maysi. They are well known and their voyage embraces no Cuban port of call.

Forcible Interference with them cannot be claimed as a belligerent act, whether they pass within three miles of the Cuban coast or not, and can under no circumstances be tolerated when no state of war exists. This government will expect prompt disavowal of the unauthorized act, and due expression of regret on the part of Spain, and it must insist that immediate and positive orders be given to Spanish naval commanders not to interfere with legitimate commerce passing through that channel, and prohibiting all acts wantonly imperiling life and property lawfully under the flag of the United States. You will communicate this to the minister of foreign affairs and urge the importance of prompt and satisfactory response. GRESHAM."

No Reply from Spain.

WASHINGTON, March 19.—Secretary Gresham was closeted all morning with the state department officers and other persons concerning diplomatic happenings since his illness. In answer to inquiries on the Allianca affair, Mr. Landis, his private secretary, said that Secretary Gresham authorized a formal denial to be made of reports that he had received from Minister Taylor any answer to the secretary's note demanding an explanation or apology from Spain.

NO NEW CARDINALS.

The Spring Consistory Passes the Business of Red Hats.

ROME, March 19.—A consistory was held here and the pope preconized 65 archbishops and bishops, including the archbishop of St. Boniface, Canada, and the bishop of St. Johns. The creation of new cardinals was postponed until the next consistory, which will probably be held in the autumn.

SUSPECTED THE GUARDS.

Hayward's Night Watch Will Hereafter Press a Button.

MINNEAPOLIS, March 19.—The officials have been suspecting for some time that the night guards over Hayward's cell have been sleeping at their post, so an A. D. T. alarm box was put into the cell and the guard is required to press the button every hour, sending an alarm to the jail.

Ex-Congressman Townsend Dead.

CLEVELAND, March 19.—Ex-Congressman Amos Townsend died at St. Augustine, Fla., of heart failure.

PRACTICAL SUGGESTIONS.

Speaking of the recent dairy convention Mr. A. Sture (who, by the way, is a practical farmer himself) said to the JOURNAL man: "I have often urged upon our farmers the importance of the dairy business and have urged them not only to attend these meetings, but to get together in mass meetings representing several townships, discuss this matter and raise a fund to send one of their most practical men down to some creamery in southern Minnesota, or Iowa, as they choose, to make a thorough study of the matter, find out how much dairy farmers have made and

HOW THEY DO IT.

What breeds of cows they have, how they feed them, what kinds of machinery they use and all about it. Then go at it along these lines and I know that success would be sure and our farmers would make some money. We ought to have cheese factories connected with creameries so that we could make cheese in the summer when butter is low in price. This system would help the land so that the farmers could raise as much grain as they now do on half the land it now requires. A man who owns 160 acres of land could keep 15 cows at least and yet raise as much grain as he does now. I wish our farmers could be brought to appreciate the importance of this matter as it really exists. They would never have reason to complain of "hard times" any more.

ASSAULTED AND HANGED.

Horrible Outrage Against a Woman in Western Nebraska.

BUTTE, Neb., March 10.—Some time Friday Mrs. W. E. Holton, a respectable woman residing alone on a ranch in an isolated part of Keya Peha county, was outraged and lynched. The crime is credited to the vigilantes of the district, who believed her in league with cattle rustlers. Some think rustlers committed the crime in revenge for evidence against them furnished by the woman. The coroner found $60 on the woman's person, which is regarded as certain evidence that the crime was not committed by tramps, as at first supposed. Her struggle for life had been a hard one. The bedding and clothing of the woman were torn and scattered about the building. Her shoes had evidently been removed, probably by herself, preparatory to going to bed, when surprised by the lynchers. The woman had evidently been outraged and everything points toward a premeditated plan for the consummation of the dastardly deed. No arrests have yet been made, but a meeting of the best citizens of the neighborhood was held and it was decided prompt measures should be taken, and it is expected that another and probably several hangings will take place before long. Several persons are under suspicion and these parties will be taken and compelled to confess. The proximity of the Indian reservation to the scene of the depredation makes it possible that a United States deputy marshal may have to make the arrests if warrants are sworn out.

Before She Was Strung Up

GETS A NEW TRIAL.

The Supreme Court Reverses the Decision Against Erastus Wiman.

NEW YORK, March 16.—Judgment was reversed and a new trial ordered in the case of The People against Erastus Wiman. The decision was handed down in the general term of the supreme court at 4 p. m. This practically affirms the position taken by Justice Barrett in granting a certificate of reasonable doubt that Judge Ingraham erred in refusing to charge the jury as to Wiman's criminal intent when he committed the forgery for which he was indicted and of which he was found guilty in the court of oyer and terminer. The opinion is written by Chief Justice Van Brunt, O'Brien concurring. Justice Follett writes a dissenting opinion.

The court holds that Wiman, as a partner in R. G. Dun & Co., had a right to sign checks, but whether he exercised the right by express or implied authority is immaterial so far as it affects the crime with which he is charged. He was not called upon to answer for having made the check, but for endorsing Bullinger's name on it with intent to fraud. The court holds that the intent with which the act was done should have been submitted to a jury.

Knocking Out Passes.

MADISON, Wis., March 16.—From the temper of the assembly Mr. Hall's joint resolution, providing for a constitutional amendment against the use of passes by legislators appears to have a show, in spite of the fact that it was adversely reported by the railroad committee. In committee of the whole Mr. Hall moved that it be recommended for a third reading, instead of for indefinite postponement, and the motion prevailed by a vote of 33 to 19.

DAIRY CONVENTION,

A DECIDED SUCCESS.

Well Attended And A Great Deal of Interest Manifested.

The Dairy convention held at the opera house on Friday and Saturday opened with a very few people in attendance promptly at 10 o'clock on Friday morning but people kept coming in until by noon there were a goodly number in the house and the afternoon meeting was a large one. The various speakers dwelt upon money in the dairy and the most practical methods of getting it. The speakers were enthusiastic upon the subject and the many questions asked them showed an interest that is truly encouraging. Farmers came from the remotest parts of the county; and came determined to learn all they could on the subject. They all took hold and made it their own meeting and we presume there is not a farmer who attended that is not glad he did so. It was indeed a very profitable meeting and will no doubt be the means of accomplishing great good.

WAS IT AN ELOPEMENT?

Our community was very much startled and shocked on Thursday of last week by the report that D. D. Overholt and Mrs. J. E. Van Tuyl had eloped, been arrested in Grand Forks and brought to this city where they were locked up in the county jail to await examination on the 23d inst. As the JOURNAL gleans the particulars it seems that Mr. Overholt's wife left him a short time since and that he went to Mr. Van Tuyl's to board for awhile when he one day took the train for Grand Forks where he put up at a hotel giving an assumed name. In a short time Mrs. Van Tyul appeared upon the scene, calling herself Mrs. Smith. Later on "Mrs. Smith's" son-in-law C. C. Lawton, of Mentor, appeared on the scene and the pair were taken into custody as above stated. The pair strenuously insisted that there was nothing wrong in their intentions or actions but to the average mind it has a very suspicious look to say the least.

The G. A. R. Banquet.

On Friday evening, after the routine work of the Post had been performed and the comrades were about to break camp the pickets were suddenly attacked, driven into camp, which, being taken so suddenly by surprise, were obliged to capitulate, make the best terms possible with the Ladies' Relief Corps, that had stormed the post in full force, bringing along three day's rations with them. After the surrender the tables were spread and the prisoners did ample justice to the abundant store of eatables set before them, while they meditated on how best to effect their escape or "turn the tables."

During the confusion attendant upon the capture, Quartermaster B. F. Zarracher, who is quite diminutive in size, managed to escape unnoticed and make his way to the nearest camp of Sons of Vets, who, when they heard the thrilling news, hastily organized a force and marched to the relief, arriving soon after the prisoners had been fed and were about to be locked up. Charging with irresistible valor the Sons were in supreme command, and after paroling the W. R. C., proceeded to complete the work of destruction upon the viands, and then followed music and dancing and cards, until the hour of 12. During the evening a band of Indians appeared, led by Old-Man-Afraid-of-His-Badge and entertained the victors and the vanquished with a genuine scalp dance, just as naturally as they do in their own native wilds. Comrade Mix got off his base, joined in the dance, and the last we saw of him he had lost nearly all his hair. Comrade Netzer could not resist the impulse and he went in, coming out minus coat, vest and collar. As a whole, the Grand Army Banquet was one of the finest in the land.

"The People Of the Northwest portion of the United States can congratulate themselves on having the elegant traveling accommodations offered by the North-Western line between Minneapolis, St. Paul and Chicago which the wealthiest and oldest roads in the effete East have not yet found it possible to excel.—The Times, Monticello, Minn.

Living Under Snow.

"I lived under snow for two months," said Tom Allen. "It was in 1868, in what were then the wilds of Minnesota near Albert Lea. Four of us had built a hut in order to hold a homestead claim, and fortunately had laid in a supply of provisions sufficient to last two or three months during the winter. One night it commenced to snow, and large flakes fell constantly for two days and nights. Then the wind began to blow, the snow continuing, and the next morning we could not open the door. The windows were completely blockaded, and we could not tell that it was daytime except by our watches. We built a big fire and staid in the house, supposing that it would pass off in a few hours, but the weather turned intensely cold. On the third day we tunneled out through the window, but found it impossible to remove the drift, which completely covered the hut. The cold weather continued without a break for two months. The top of the snow became hard enough to bear our weight, and we would go out by the window, returning at night, but it was two months before the snow thawed sufficient to uncover the hut."—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

The Taste For Putrid Game.

The reason for what might otherwise be condemned as a depraved taste among English epicures is that in the last century the nobility and the squirarchy were often greatly puzzled to know what to do with the game they shot. They could not eat pheasants, partridges and hares every day. Had they done so, satiety or perhaps blood poisoning would have resulted. Even fat haunch of venison and venison pasty cloy after awhile. They might make presents to their neighbors, but their neighbors were principally noblemen and squires with ample preserves. So the game was smuggled up to London and "swapped" for fish, and the fishmongers in the course of business sold it to rich merchants and professional families with no preserves of their own. But during its sojourn in the squire's larder, its abode in the lumbering wagon which brought it to the metropolis and its residence in the fishmonger's cellar it had usually become exceedingly "high," and the gourmet classes in time became as fond of high game as George I was of bad oysters.—All the Year Round.

Trimming a Black Silk.

Rich jet decorations, having mingled with them gold or steel, are liked upon black silk, although it must be confessed that, while the jet looks richer with the contrasting glitter, still one is less likely to tire of the plain jet. Bands imitating colored stones are set into coarse white lace and used for vests, cuffs, collars or capes. They come out most effectively against the black background. Velvet, black or of a bright color, is liked upon black silk, and its use, as should the use of every decoration, depends upon the style of the woman who is to wear the frock. The old idea that an elderly woman's gown must be severe, and I am tempted to say ugly, is no longer held. Youth and beauty do not require rich gowns and magnificent trimmings to bring out their perfections, but when middle age has come then there is a right to claim all of the beautiful stuffs and all of the beautiful decorations, so that any imperfection of figure or face may be hidden entirely, or at least so nearly entirely that it is unnoticed.—Emma M. Hooper in Ladies' Home Journal.

A Human Locomotive.

George S. Spriggs, a mechanic for the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, stationed at Mount Clare, who his friends think is one of the strongest men in the world, last night gave such a demonstration of strength that his friends are probably not far wrong. Unaided he moved for several feet up a slight incline of track a freight car which, with its contents, weighed 55,000 pounds. This is thought to be the world's record, as the heaviest car known to have been previously moved by single man power weighed, with its contents, 35,000 pounds. This occurred in San Francisco several years ago. Last night a little knot of interested persons gathered at the Mount Clare shops. Spriggs' first attempt was a freight car weighing, with contents, 42,000 pounds. This he moved eight feet, and it seemed easy. Then he waited a short time to gather his strength and went for a huge car of the record breaking weight. He strained and tugged, finally starting it and moving it the required eight feet.—Baltimore American.

The Matabele.

There has always been a doubt since the last hostile operations of the English in South Africa as to what has become of that once powerful and prosperous tribe known as the Matabele, which for so long held the British invader in check. That they have disappeared from the scene and that Africa is rid of their presence has repeatedly been stated officially both in and out of parliament. It was reserved for Mr. Rhoades, the autocrat of the southern portion of the dark continent, to enlighten the world as to the ultimate fate of the unfortunate natives. In a speech delivered in London the other day, with as little regard for grammar as for the aversion felt by civilized nations to cannibalism, he deliberately confessed in speaking of the Matabele, "We've incorporated them into ourselves."—New York Tribune.

Photography a Science.

The Cosmopolitan Magazine contains an article by James L. Breese on the subject of the "Relations of Photography to Art." The author says: "Primarily and in itself photography is not an art, but a science. There are no circumstances in which a painter can paint well without using artistic judgment, but there are many circumstances under which a photographer may photograph well without using any but scientific judgment. This is one of the signs by which we may know that photography is primarily a science."

Reports from the country show the land in fine condition for seeding just as soon as the frost goes out a little more. The oldest inhabitant does not remember such spring in this country. If we get no more snow there will be very little mud.

The entertainment at the opera house on Monday evening drew a crowded house and was highly enjoyed by all who were there. The amateurs conducted themselves in a highly creditable manner, and the receipts of the evening must have been highly gratifying.

CROOKSTON, MINN

Our German farmer friends have been asking themselves this serious question: "Where did Cronkhite himself when the important vote on the taxation of railroad lands was taken?" The conclusions that they eventually reach is liable to be of interest to Senator Cronkhite.

E. J. Haseltine was down from Euclid last week after some flax for seed and incidentally dropped in to see how the dairy convention progressed. Haseltine said: "After trying farming here a number of years, I went back to Wisconsin awhile but soon saw that I could make more money here, so I came back as quick as I could."

Peter Cornelius indulged in a birthday on Tuesday and his friends took occasion to surprise him in the evening. Music, dancing and games were indulged in until a late hour and when the jolly company broke up they all united in expressions of pleasure at the success of the affair and the wish that Pete would see at least fifty more.

Louis Fontaine's nine months old Brown Swiss bull challenged the admiration of the dairy convention on Friday, when he was placed in evidence in front of the opera house. This is the only representation of this breed in the state north of St. Paul. They are said to be good dairy animals, and as they are blocky built they should be a good combination breed.

Hon. B. Sampson tells of a trip to Becker county that he recently made and, while he searched diligently for signs of Pops, it was very few he could find. Says the people are getting tired of the impracticable schemes of the Populist party and are coming back into the Republican party in droves. He predicts that in Becker county, at the next election the Populists will be conspicuous by their absence.

Wm. Skinner came up from Fisher on Monday to sell some of the finest corn-fed beef ever offered in this market fed on Minnesota grown corn. Mr. Skinner raised the corn himself and says he never got a finer crop anywhere. He has fattened his steers on the corn and they are a magnificent lot. Mr. S. has a very early kind of corn, that is a heavy yielder and will plant a large acreage the coming year. We understand that he has some of the seed to spare.

Judge Benson drove out to Neby on some probate business on Monday. Says that all along the route the farmers were busy getting ready for seeding; fixing up machinery, cleaning seed, and all that sort of thing. Very much of the land is nearly ready for seeding and will require but a few more days this kind of weather. Coming home the judge got lost, took a bay road, or some other kind of road and it was well along in the morning when he finally reached home, pretty well tired out with the trip.

As a rule the train on the Great Northern road arrives promptly on time, which is 6 o'clock, but it is very rarely that one can get his morning daily from the post-office much before eight. As our genial postmaster has always shown a disposition to discharge his duty promptly and efficiently, we presume this is an oversight. Of course he is not LEGALLY obliged to open his office before seven in the morning, but the interests of the patrons of the office would be best served by the prompt distributing of the mail on its arrival, which would be very highly appreciated by our business men and by employes who have to commence work at seven and would like their mail before they go to work. As our postmaster was among the first to start the Commercial club in the interest of the business men of the city, he will, of course, be willing to do all in his power to subserve the interest of the city in every way.

Charlie Rupp showed up in good form on Monday morning, having spent some time at Hot Springs, Ark.—but not as long as he had planned to, however. He says when the small pox first broke out there was but little excitement, and he did not get uneasy, but when it got so that the victims died off at the rate of 25 or 30 each day, he did get a little nervous, and when they picked up his next neighbor at breakfast and carried him off to the pest house he thought it best to skip, and fell back on Chicago in good order, where he stayed a few weeks. Says Casper Sands and John Wyatt are doing nicely and will be able to return in a short time. Charley says in all his travels he has seen no better country than we have here in the valley and as to hard times we don't know anything about it. At any rate a person don't want to go south to better his condition.

TRULY ASTONISHING.—Miss Annette N. Moen, Fountain, Minn., says: "Ayer's Cherry Pectoral has had a wonderful effect in curing my brother's children of a severe and dangerous cold. It was truly astonishing how speedily they found relief after taking this preparation."

The second service (at 7:30) will be entitled, "An Evening with Dr. Watts."

Next Sunday the Congregational minister will give the third in the series of Lenten morning discourses.

Beginning last evening the Congregational people are devoting several mid-week services to the study of "The Four Months of Our Saviour's Life which preceded the Crucifixion."

The Cheerful Idiot.

"Do you know," said the cheerful idiot, "that it is the easiest thing in the world to tell whether a man is going out on a journey or returning by the way he carries his valise?"

"I never thought of that," said the youngest boarder. "What is the difference?"

The cheerful idiot settled himself a little firmer in his chair and gloated a moment before answering.

"It is just this way," he went on. "When a man is going away, he carries his valise toward the railroad station, and when he is coming back he carries it in the other direction."—Indianapolis Journal.

Foreman—Jim fell down with this form of type and mashed it. What must I do?

Editor—Run it in as a Chinese telegram.—Chicago Record.

Treated as a Foreigner.

Talk about local conceit! The most stupendous example on record was shown last Tuesday by a reporter on a Boston daily.

The reporter's special work was interviewing. Whenever any well known person from abroad started for our shores, he was invariably sent down the harbor loaded with questions on the foreigner's impressions of our marvelous country.

Well, on Tuesday morning he was assigned to interview an eminent westerner recently arrived.

The reporter's knock at the stranger's door was answered by a cheerful "Come in."

"I called to apologize for our weather," began the man of the press. He marveled at his own impromptu cleverness.

The westerner smiled. "Don't be disturbed," he said. "To be sure, out in Iowa"—

"You are from Iowa?" the reporter interrupted.

"Yes."

"Indeed! And how do you like America?"—Boston Budget.

She Stood Firm.

In an Oregon court recently a case came up in which a husband sued to regain possession of real estate which, in a moment of generosity, he had deeded to his wife. The following dialogue took place between the plaintiff's lawyer and the defendant, a lady of Irish birth:

"You admit that your husband requested and even implored you to execute a deed in his favor?"

"Yis, sor, he did, an shwore at me too."

"And you refused point blank to do so?"

"Yis, sor, I did. I tould him a dade in me hand is wort' two in me husband's pocket. But I offered to make a will in favor of him, an he wouldn't have it. He tould me he'd sue me for a dade."

"And you allowed him to do so?"

"Yis, sor, I did. I says to him, 'John, me darlint, sue away, but ye'll find it's a case where ye'll have to take the will for the dade.' "—Youth's Companion.

Carrying Coals to Newcastle.

An English lady set out for Germany on a visit to some of her relatives. Going to Buy a Watch?

If so, buy one that cannot be stolen. The only thief-proof Watches are those with Non-pull-out BOWS.

Here's the Idea:

The bow has a groove on each end. A collar runs down inside the pendent (stem) and fits into the grooves, firmly locking the bow to the pendent, so that it cannot be pulled or twisted off.

To be sure of getting a Non-pull-out, see that the case is stamped with this trade mark. It cannot be had with any other kind.

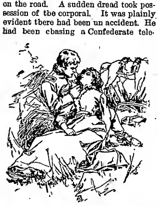
CHAPTER XII.

A CHANGED ENEMY.

Corporal Ratigan had been worked up to such a fever of excitement by the chase and his complicated feelings toward the object of it that when he shot over the rise in the ground that hid the fugitive from his view his visage was distorted from the expression of good nature usually stamped upon it to one which can only be called demoniac. His eyes were wild, that portion of his hair which extended below his forage cap seemed to glow with unusual redness, his body leaned forward like a jockey in a race, the whole forming a picture of eager ferocity. In short, Corporal Ratigan resembled an escaped lunatic chasing a flying fiend who had been torturing him.

On the crest of the second rise he strained his eyes after Miss Baggs. Nothing appeared to denote her presence on the landscape except a horse in harness, which he dragged in the dust, trotting back toward a heap of rubbish on the road. A sudden dread took possession of the corporal. It was plainly evident there had been an accident. He had been chasing a Confederate telegraph stealer that he might turn her over to the military authorities of his own army to be hanged, and now he was suddenly plunged into terror for fear she had been killed. He went on, but with a new object distinct in his mind. It was not to injure Miss Baggs, but to succor her.



He put the neck of a battered canteen to her lips.

He soon came to the heap of splinters and iron which marked the point of collapse of Miss Baggs' buggy. Miss Baggs was not visible. Had she taken to the wood beyond the fork of the road? For a moment there was a delightful sense of relief, but it was soon followed by the animal instinct of the savage chasing an object of prey. Stimulated by this, or a return of a sense of duty, or both, he was about to ride into the wood, when, looking down on the long grass by the roadside, he descried the unconscious body, the face apparently white in death, of the woman he sought.

In a moment the corporal was off his horse and on his knees beside her. The chase in which he had been so eager and the cause were both forgotten on seeing Miss Baggs lying apparently cold in death at his feet.

"Darlin, are ye hurt?"

There was agony in the corporal's voice. He put an arm under her head to raise it. With the other he grasped her hands.

"To the divil's own keepin with the war anyway. What's it good for except to injure innocent women and children?"

In that nonresistance of unconsciousness he forgot that this woman had been engaged in what the world condemns openly, if not secretly, as illegitimate warfare. To him she was innocent, not that he reasoned upon her acts, but because a mysterious something—a breath from spirit land—had made her more to him than all the world beside. He laid his head down upon her breast to listen if the heart beat; he chafed her hands and arms; he took off his cap and fanned her. Still she lay limp in his arms without a sign of life.

"Darlin, darlin, come back to life. Come back, if it's only long enough to tell me ye forgive me for me cowardly chasin ye. Oi've killed ye. Oi know it. Oi wish some one would run a bayonet through me own rotten heart."

A slight murmur, something like a groan, escaped her.

"Praise God, there's life! If it'd only grow stronger! Ah, thank heaven, there's water!"

Laying her head down in the grass, he went to the side of the road where there was a runnel of clear water. Scooping some of it in his two hands, he threw it in her face.

She opened her eyes.

Corporal Ratigan never forgot the look with which his prisoner regarded him when she recognized who he was. There were two expressions following each other rapidly—the first, reproach; but when she noticed the pain with which it was received it melted into one of tenderness.

"Ah, Rats," she exclaimed faintly, "how could you do it?"

He put his great hands—brown from exposure—before his eyes to shut out the face which at every glance kindled some new emotion to rack him. Now that she had come to life another terror came to him to administer an added torture. He knew that mounted men were following; that they would soon appear over the crest just behind them; that his prisoner would be taken, tried and condemned.

"They're comin! They'll be here in a jiffy!" he cried wildly. "Tell me that ye forgive me. Tell me that ye don't hate me as I hate meself."

"For doing your duty, Rats?"

"Duty! Is it a man's duty to run down a woman like a hare? Don't talk to me of duty. If ye suffer for this, Oi'll desert and go back to Oireland, and God be praised if he'll send a storm to sink the ship and me in it. There's a drop in me canteen—a drop of whisky. Will ye take it, darlin—I mean—I don't know what I'm talkin about. Let me put it to yer lips. Take a swallow. It'll revive ye. No?" She appeared to be passing back to unconsciousness. "Take it for moi sake, sweetheart. Only take a good swallow, and ye'll be righted."

She opened her eyes. Evidently she had heard. There was an expression on her face indicating that his words had produced that effect upon her which might be expected in a woman who hears a strong man, unconsciously and unintentionally, declaring his love.

"Why do you wish me to live, Rats? Don't let me live. If you do, I'll die on the gibbet."

"Oh, darlin," he moaned, "don't be talkin that way. Oi'll die meself first. Oi'll raise a mutiny. Oi'll"—

He could not go on. His words mocked him. He well knew their futility. "Take a drop, sweetheart—only a drop for moi sake."

What a change from the day he had jokingly asked her to take an oath for "moi sake!"

"For your sake, Rats. Give it to me."

He put the neck of a battered tin canteen to her lips, and she drank a little of the liquid. It produced a beneficial change at once. A tinge of color came to her cheeks, and she breathed more easily.

A clattering of horses' hoofs, a clanking of sabers, mounted figures standing out against the morning sky on the crest behind them, and three cavalrymen are dashing on to where lies Miss Baggs and kneels the corporal.

"Promise me, Rats, that you will do nothing foolish," she asked pleadingly.

"O God! Oi'm going to draw me revolver on 'em."

"Promise."

"I can't."

"For moi sake, Rats."

The faintest trace of a smile, despite her desperate situation, passed over her face as she imitated the corporal's pronunciation. The quaint humor, mingled with so many singular traits prominent in her that could show itself at so critical a moment, touched a responsive Irish chord in his Irish heart and brought him to terms.

"For your sake, darlin, Oi'll do it," he said in a despairing voice.

There was scarcely time for him to speak the words—indeed they were whispered with his lips touching her ear—when the three cavalrymen rode up to where the two were.

"What's it all about, corporal?" asked one of them.

"I found this—this lady—lying here. Her buggy is broken. She is badly hurt." The corporal spoke the words haltingly, and drops of sweat stood out on his forehead.

"Who is she?"

"Well, that's to be found out some other time. One of ye'd better ride back for an ambulance and a surgeon."

"Never mind the surgeon," said Miss Baggs faintly.

"Well, bring the ambulance anyway," said Ratigan. "Ye can all go back if ye like. Oi'll stay with her. She's me own prisoner."

"There's no need of all going," said the man who had spoken. "I'll go myself."

He turned and rode away, while the others dismounted and threw the reins of their bridles over a fence rail. One of them caught Bobby Lee, who was cropping the grass near by, occasionally looking up as though suspicious that something had happened. The men loitered about, now and then approaching to take a look at the prisoner, but soon turning away again, quite willing to be free from the responsibility which Corporal Ratigan seemed disposed to take upon himself.

"Rats," said Miss Baggs, who was now rapidly recovering strength and coolness, "it will not be long before I shall be separated from you. Before then I wish to thank you for the kindness, the interest, even the tenderness, with which you have treated a fallen enemy. And I wish to ask your forgiveness for the deception I practiced on you once when you were deputed to see me through the lines."

"What was that compared with what Oi've done?" he moaned.

"Do you forgive me?"

"Oi do. But Oi've nothin to forgive."

"And, Rats, you have unconsciously let me know that you—you feel more kindly toward me than"—

"You've robbed me of me heart intirely."

"Well, I'm both glad and sorry. It is delightful to be loved, but sad to think that your very love must make you grieve. Our meetings have been few and strange—very strange," she added musingly. "Who are you, Rats? I know you are well born. I can see it in every word and motion."

"Oi'm second son of Sir Thomas Ratigan, Esq., of County Cavan, Oireland. At his death me older brother succeeded to the estate. So I came to America to shift for meself. A year ago Oi enlisted in the Union ranks, and here Oi am. Oi wish to God me brother was in his coffin and Oi in possession of the estates, that Oi could give them all to save your life."

"No, no, Rats. You are a soldier and an honorable man. Remember what I have told you. You will do your duty hereafter as you have done it heretofore. Your words in that respect are meaningless. Your sense of honor will always triumph over your sympathy when that sympathy is alloyed with dishonor. For this I have conceived for you an unbounded respect. Perhaps were I not so soon to be"—

"Don't speak it, for God's sake don't speak it."

"Well, Rats, we will try for the brief time we shall be together to fix our minds on a pleasant picture. Let us think of that day when the south will be independent, or at least when north and south will be at peace. This region, now trodden by soldiers wearing the blue and the gray, will be given up to those simple people who till the soil. Instead of the sound of shotted guns there will be the lowing of cattle. Instead of the singing of minie balls there will be the songs of birds. There will be peace, blessed peace. Oh, if I could only live to see it! Then perhaps I may take you by the hand, say to you—But, Rats, this can never be for us. It is only a fancy picture I've drawn to relieve that terrible suffering I see in your face. You've aged ten years in as many minutes. Don't look at me in that dreadful way. I can't bear it."

The two cavalrymen's backs were turned. They were strolling toward the woods. Ratigan put his arms about her, and both yielded to a long embrace. There were no more words spoken. Words would have added nothing to what both felt. There was more pain and more pleasure concentrated in the bosom of each than had been there in all the years they had lived.

CHAPTER XIII.

"TURNED OVER."

There was a rattling of wheels on the soft road, and looking up Ratigan saw the messenger returning, followed by an ambulance. Driving to Miss Baggs, who was still lying in the grass, the driver backed it up to her, while the messenger dismounted and opened the door. The cavalrymen stood ready to lift the prisoner into the vehicle. But Miss Baggs waved them all away except the corporal, and taking his hand rose to her feet and stood for a moment supported by him. The effort was too much for her. Her head fell on his shoulder, and for a moment she lost consciousness. Ratigan took her off her feet, and lifting her into the ambulance laid her on the cushions.

"Oi'll ride at the foot," he said to the others. "One of ye lead me horse."

When they came to the place where each had successively emerged from the camp through which Ratigan had followed her before daylight, they found the road lined with soldiers, whose curiosity brought them there to see the woman who had succeeded in breaking through a whole chain of guards. They had all heard of the exploit and crowded around the ambulance as it passed, but were kept away by the guards in attendance, who dropped back to the sides and rear. This prevented any further conversation between Ratigan and Miss Baggs, except an occasional whisper, but the corporal managed to keep her hand in his under a blanket, unobserved. At last the ambulance pulled up before the headquarters of the division whose camp they had entered, and Ratigan suddenly became conscious of the fact that he must turn his prisoner over to others, doubtless to be dealt with summarily, for he well knew the case would naturally receive prompt attention.

An officer with a captain's shoulder straps came out from headquarters and surveyed the ambulance. He was a dapper little fellow, fat and red faced.

"Who've you got there?" he asked of Ratigan.

"A lady, sir."

"The woman who ran the guards last night?"

"Oi captured her on the road below."

"H'm. The guard duty of this division is in a fine condition when a woman can run a whole chain of sentinels. Get her out of that."

"She's badly hurt, captain," said Ratigan, who had stepped down on to the ground and saluted.

"I can alight," said Miss Baggs feebly. And getting as best she could to the door of the ambulance Ratigan helped her out. She looked faint, but stood by the aid of the corporal's arm.

"Take her in to the general," said the little captain. "He wants to see her."

As the tent was an ordinary wall tent, there was no great room in it. Miss Baggs went inside, while the corporal stood directly outside, with his hand on the tent pole.

"I must have you searched," said the general to the prisoner. Then he added, somewhat hesitatingly, "It's rather awkward not having a woman in camp."

"I will relieve you of the necessity," said the prisoner, with dignity, and putting her hand into her pocket she drew forth a bundle of papers, which she handed to him.

"What are these?" asked the surprised commander.

"Copies of intercepted telegrams."

The general uttered an exclamation, and taking the papers ran them over with his eye.

He looked up at the woman, who, save for the pallor occasioned by her fall from the collapsed buggy, stood apparently unmoved. There was admiration in the eye of the man who gazed at her. He was astonished at the coolness with which she handed him documents that would warrant his hanging her to a tree without a moment's delay, and above all there was about her a divine consciousness of having done a duty, a look of triumph under defeat, that compelled his reverence as well as his admiration.

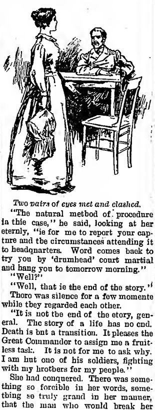
"Are you aware," he said, "that with these dispatches in your possession, and beyond our lines, you would hold this army at your mercy?"

"I am."

"And that captured with them on your person your life is forfeited?"

"Certainly."

There are people who cannot brook a steady stand in one who may be naturally expected to break down in their presence. The general was one of these. In proportion as he admired her firmness was his desire to force her to show some giving way. He did not analyze his feelings and attribute his desire to any such cause. He yielded to it without realizing that the cause existed.



Two pairs of eyes met and clashed.

"The natural method of procedure in this case," he said, looking at her sternly, "is for me to report your capture and the circumstances attending it to headquarters. Word comes back to try you by 'drumhead' court martial and hang you to tomorrow morning."

"Well?"

"Well, that is the end of the story."

There was silence for a few moments while they regarded each other.

"It is not the end of the story, general. The story of a life has no end. Death is but a transition. It pleases the Great Commander to assign me a fruitless task. It is not for me to ask why. I am but one of his soldiers, fighting with my brothers for my people."

She had conquered. There was something so forcible in her words, something so truly grand in her manner, that the man who would break her spirit desisted. He regarded her admiringly and was silent.

"All I ask, general," she said presently, seeing that he did not speak, "is that there be no greater delay than necessary. Now I have a strength which may be worn away by long waiting, with death staring me in the face."

Still the officer did not speak. He was thinking—thinking how he could get rid of so unpleasant a duty as the trial and execution of this splendid woman. He feared that should he report her capture to headquarters he would get the same reply as in the case he had cited.

"I will not harm you," he said presently. "Some one else must take the responsibility of this complication of death and a woman."

"It does not matter who does the work, so long as it must be done."

"Perhaps not to you. It matters a great deal to me. My hands are clean. I don't care to stain them."

While this conversation was going on Corporal Ratigan was listening and observing the speakers with a palpitating heart. There was something so cold out in the general's tones that the corporal felt a repugnance at his prisoner being in his especial keeping. He preferred that she should be sent to some one else and was relieved when he announced his intention to shift the responsibility. Besides the corporal hoped that he would himself be intrusted with her keeping until she should arrive at some camp where the commander would be willing to receive her.

"Shall Oi take her to headquarters, general?" he asked.

"Ah, my man!" said the general, as though awakened from a reverie, "are you here? I had forgotten you."

"Oi can conduct her to headquarters if you desire it, general."

"I am not in the habit of receiving suggestions from my brigade or regimental commanders, much less a corporal."

Ratigan saw that he had made a mistake and said nothing. The general regarded him with his shrewd eyes. It was plain to him that the man was interested in his prisoner.

"Corporal, you may go to your camp."

"Yes, sir."

"Orderly," called the general to a man standing near, "take this woman to the ambulance."

As Miss Baggs passed out the eyes of the two were fixed again on each other. While the general did not use words he could not resist a last attempt with his presence, his masterful countenance, his piercing eyes, to overawe his prisoner. She met that gaze firmly, unflinchingly, till she was without the tent; then with a final glance of contempt she turned and walked toward the ambulance.

The general called her back.

"You do not seem well satisfied with my treatment of you," he said in a tone in which there was something of sarcasm. "We soldiers must do our duty."

"It is not your doing your duty, general, that fails to win my respect. It is that you have not the manliness to do it yourself, but must needs put it upon some one else."

Again the two pairs of eyes met and clashed. The victory was with the woman. The general lowered his to the ground.

"You may go," he said.

As soon as she was gone he went to a tent where there were writing materials and wrote a note, which he sealed and addressed. Giving it to the little captain, he directed him to send it with the prisoner and the dispatches captured on her, to the officer whose name was on the envelope.

SOME INTERESTING LAMPS.

Very Many Incandescent Lights That Are Real Wonders.

Electric lamps are made of all sizes, from 100 candle power and over down to one-half candle, but the small ones are decidedly the most interesting and picturesque. At a large factory there is a special department devoted to decorative and miniature lamps of all shapes and colors, curious and beautiful. There are "candelabra" lamps, much used for lighting private residences, and which are generally ten candle power. Some of them are pear shaped, while others are long and tapering and of an extremely graceful form. They are often fitted to receptacles concealed in imitation candles, and while they have all the warmth and elegance of the old fashioned wax tapers they give a far steadier and brighter light. One of the most striking styles is the "flame" lamp, which is a narrow cone of glass, twisted spirally and frosted. It has the beauties of a brightly burning flame, with none of the drawbacks.

There is the eight candle power "kinetoscope" lamp, which illuminates the photographs on the rapidly moving celluloid strip in Edison's remarkable picture gallery. A one candle power lamp is used for night work in telephone exchanges. One is placed in each panel of the switchboard and lights up whenever a call comes to its territory, and stays lighted until the call is answered, so that one or two operators can easily manage all the night business wherever it is not very heavy.

Many varieties of lamps are arranged to take their current from batteries. Among these is the one candle power miner's lamp, of a flat shape, with metal loops at top and bottom, so that it can be hooked upon springs in the miner's lantern and held steady. The lamp and the battery together are not heavy. Then there are bicycle lamps, microscope lamps, and lamps for medical and dental work. Some of the lamps used for illuminating the interior of the mouth, throat and nose are extremely small, generally cylindrical in shape, a quarter inch or less in diameter and from half an inch to an inch long. But the tiniest of all is the "pea" lamp, a glass sphere one-quarter of an inch in diameter.—Cassier's Magazine.

Forming Characters.

No human being can come into this world without increasing or diminishing the sum total of human happiness not only of the present but every subsequent age of humanity. No one can detach himself from this connection. There is no sequestered spot in the universe, no dark niche along the disk of nonexistence, to which he can retreat from his relations to others, where he can withdraw the influence of his existence upon the moral destiny of the world. Everywhere his presence or absence will be felt. Everywhere he will have companions who will be better or worse for his influence. It is an old saying, and one of fearful and fathomless import, that we are forming characters for eternity. Forming characters! Whose? Our own or others? Both, and in that momentous fact lie the peril and responsibility of our existence. Who is sufficient for the thought? Thousands of my fellow beings will yearly enter eternity with characters differing from those they would have carried thither had I never lived. The sunlight of that world will reveal my finger marks in their primary formations and in their successive strata of thought and life.—Elihu Burritt.

Calvinized.

One very hot day the late Dr. George E. Ellis, the historian, going to an informal dinner with a friend, wore a very comfortable but unfashionable thin coat and manilla hat. A notoriously orthodox clergyman began to banter the Unitarian divine regarding his big straw hat, whereupon Dr. Ellis replied that he would not have a word said against that article of apparel, inasmuch as it had been a good friend of his for four years. "Why," exclaimed his friend, "how could it have lasted so long?" "Because it has been Calvinized," replied Dr. Ellis. The host, misunderstanding the word, inquired with amazement how the hat could be galvanized. But Dr. Ellis, with a sly twinkle in his eye, looked straight at the orthodox minister as he replied: "I did not say 'galvanized.' I said the hat had been Calvanized—dipped in brimstone."—San Francisco Argonaut.

Metatarsalgia.

Metatarsalgia, or fourth toe disease, has been the subject of much scientific discussion. Many patients have been operated on, the operation consisting of the removal of a portion of the bone of the toe, which had become highly inflamed. A new form of treatment is that of shaping the shoe that the weight will not come directly upon the ball of the foot, but slightly back of the ball, and this is secured by making the ankle and instep close fitting and the toe and ball very broad and easy. One physician advises that a depression be made in the sole of the shoe just beneath the fourth toe, so that there shall be no pressure from any direction. This works well in some cases, but in others the surgical remedy is the only successful one.—New York Ledger.

Idol Worship.

I have never had the opportunity of examining the idol worshiping mind of a savage, but it seems possible that the immutability of aspect of his little wooden god may sometimes touch him with an astounded awe, even when and indeed especially after he had thrashed it.—"Rhoda Fleming," George Meredith.

Lincoln's memory for the details of national business was unexampled. He recalled the particulars of every cabinet meeting with the most scrupulous exactness.

Needles antedate history. They were first made in America in 1680.

A YOUNG GIRL'S FORTUNE.

AN INTERESTING SKETCH.

Nothing appeals so strongly to a mother's affection as her daughter just budding into womanhood. Following is an instance: "Our daughter, Blanche, now 15 years of age, had been terribly afflicted with nervousness, and had lost the entire use of her right arm. She was in such a condition, that we had to keep her from school and abandon her music lessons. In fact, we feared St. Vitus dance, and are positive but for an invaluable remedy she would have had that terrible affliction. We had employed physicians, but she received no benefit from them. The first of last August she weighed but 75 pounds, and although she has taken only three bottles of Nervine she now weighs 106 pounds; her nervousness and symptoms of St. Vitus dance are entirely gone, she attends school regularly, and studies with comfort and ease. She has recovered complete use of her arm, her appetite is splendid, and no money could procure for our daughter the health Dr. Miles' Nervine has brought her.

When my brother recommended the remedy I had no faith in patent medicines, and would not listen to him, but as a last resort he sent us a bottle, we began giving it to Blanche, and the effect was almost immediate."—Mrs. R. R. Bullock, Brighton, N. Y.

Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or sent direct by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid. It is positively free from opiates or dangerous drugs.

Potatoes as Penholders.

"It is surprising," says a commercial traveler, "how general the use of potatoes as penholders is becoming in hotels. I have seen them in use in great hostelries of the east, whose owners wouldn't hesitate for a moment to spend $10 for a desk ornament to hold pens used by the guests in registering. The mixture of starch, glucose and water in the potato seems well adapted to take up the impurities of ink and to keep the pen point clear and bright, while the alkaloid of the potato, known as solanine, doubtless has something to do with it in the same line. These elements readily take up the tannate of iron, which is the body substance of ink. Chemically speaking, starch is the first base of a potato, and sugar or glucose is its second base. Thus is the humble potato finding another way in which to serve the uses of mankind."—New York Tribune.

A Mean Trick.

"My husband played such a mean trick on me," said one woman to another on the street car the other day.

"How?" asked the friend sympathetically.

"Why, I found he was smoking 50 cents' worth of cigars a day, and I got him to agree to give me as much pin money a week as smoking cost him. He stuck to it one week."

"And then what?"

"He bought a clay pipe and a pound of 10 cent tobacco and cut my pin money down to 3 cents a week."—Exchange.

Explained.

Two friends, a weaver and a tailor, became in time enemies, so much so that the tailor spoke much evil of the weaver behind his back, though the weaver always spoke well of the tailor. Upon a lady asking the weaver why he always spoke so well of the tailor, who spoke so ill of him, he replied, "Madam, we are both liars."—"Humor of Spain."

No Cash.

"Why so glum?" asked his friend.

"Aren't you doing a roaring business?"

"Yes, I am," admitted the basso, "but it is all on notes."—Cincinnati Tribune.

GOV. CLOUGH has signed the railroad lands taxation bill and now the people will have a chance to vote on the question.

THE East Grand Forks Review enters its fifth year with apparently bright prospects. The Review man has tried to give his readers a good paper and deserves a hearty support.

THE signs of the times point to an early return to the general prosperity the country enjoyed under Republican rule. This is owing to the fact that the people are tired of Democratic misrule and will see to it that Republicans are placed on guard just as soon as that can be done.

DR. ZIER'S patent medicine bill, that was defeated, is followed by another of the same purport, which should be and doubtless will be defeated. It is house file No. 626. Write to your members in the legislature to use their influence against the measure.

THE enterprising citizens of Minneapolis are talking of adding a $2000,000 building to their offer of a capitol site to the state of Minnesota. What's the matter with a similar offer from St. Paul? Those fellows ought to wake up and get a move on before Minnie gets away with the capitol. She seems to be in dead earnest and when she sets her heart on any object she don't let any grass grow under her feet.

THE Senate has discovered that J. Q. Cronkhite had been excused some time previous to the taking of that vote on railroad taxation, and had not reported yet. His constituents are wondering why the senate had not reported in time to vote on a measure of so much importance to them. They thought that was what they sent him there for—to vote on and work for such measures.

WILL people never learn sense? After all that has been written and printed of the danger of lighting fires with kerosene oil, it would seem as though no one would be fool enough to indulge in that sort of pastime, but they do, it seems. A woman in St. Paul attempted to kindle her fire one morning with kerosene, and not only was she burned so badly that she died soon after, but another woman also. The explosion set fire to the house and nearly destroyed that also.

Buying Gold from the Rothschilds.

The bargain that Secretary Carlisle had made with prominent New York bankers was, in fact, concluded with those financiers as representatives of the Rothschilds and other large Euorpean investors; and our government was allowed a premium which made the interest rate equivalent to 3¾ per cent. When it is remembered that Secretary Windom only a few short years ago was readily able to borrow money on the credit of the United States at 2 per cent., and that he actually did extend at this low rate large blocks of bonds which were about to become payable, it is deeply humiliating to reflect that now in a time of profound peace, when the comparative stagnation of private enterprise has piled up both in Europe and America vast quantities of capital seeking safe investment in public securities, our government should be compelled to day 3¾ per cent. All of our outstanding bonds are payable in "coin," and as a matter of fact our government has never attempted to pay off any of its obligations in any other than the very best kind of dollars in existence.—From "The Progress of the World," March Review of Reviews.

A Record of Incapacity.

Strong superlatives are seldom justified. Nevertheless it would not seem ill-advised to declare that the whole financial history of modern nations furnishes no instance of incapacity so great, of statesmanship so utterly wanting, of common sense so pitiable abdicated, as our own country has shown in the past two years. There has been frittered away the highest public credit that any nation had ever attained; and this change has been wrought when no difficulties whatever existed except the one difficulties that the party in power could not agree upon any policy. Whatever President Cleveland and the New York banking interests may think, the people of the United States do not want long-bearing bonds issued in time of peace. The people would unquestionable have preferred an issue of short-time treasury certificates of one sort or another to meet temporary exigencies, and a prompt levy of sufficient new taxes to bring current revennes up to the point of meeting amply both the current expenditures and also all futher tasks imposed by the necessity of maintaining the gold reserve and the interchangeability of all sorts of money. It is to be regretted that everybody at Washington might not have been willing at least to agree upon some which would prevent the use of the outstanding greenbacks as an endless chain for drawing gold out of the treasury.—From "The Progress of the World," March Review of Reviews.

Tunnels.

The Romans, who were great engineers, excavated some remarkable tunnels for aqueducts but it has been reserved to the moderns to use them in rail-building. One of the first was that under the river Thames at London, commenced in 1825, finished in 1843, and for a while one of the world's supposed wonders. It has since been eclipsed by the Severn tunnel (also constructed under a river) which is 4½ miles long. The most noted railroad tunnels are: St. Gothard, 9¼ miles: Mont Cenis, 7½ miles; and the Hoosac, 4¾ miles. The railway from Bologna to Pistoja, across the Appennines (Italy) has forty-six tunnels in a distance of sixty-two miles equaled only by the Black Forest railway (Germany) which has twenty-nine tunnels in fifteen miles, one of which forms a complete letter "S". The world now has eighty-six canals tunnels, length 66 miles; nine hundrd and fifty-seven railway tunnels, 291 miles; eight sub-aqueous tunnels, 6½ miles; and thirty-seven aqueducts, 80 miles. North America has one hundred and fifteen railroad tunnels, several of them engineering works of great skill and cost—but though the Burlington Route has none of them, its attractions in the way of equipment, speed, safety and scenery are such that it is the favorite line with hundreds of thousands of intelligent travelers between the great cities of Chicago, St. Louis, Denver, Kansas City, Omaha, Minneapolis and St. Paul. 'In These Days Of Comfort and Convenience in Railway Train Services American people are apt to become a bit hardened and unappreciative. They are getting sort of calloused to luxury, so to speak, so that it takes something unusual to evoke words of praise. No more pointed example of the perfection of train service can be found anywhere than in the fine North-Western Limited.—Progressive Age Minneapolis, Minn.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

From our Regular Correspondent.

WASHINGTON, Mar. 15, 1895.

More foreign complications for Mr. Cleveland and Secretary Gresham to get themselves tangled up in! This week has added several complications with foreign countries, in addition to those already existing on account of discriminations by Germany, France and several other smaller European nations against American products. It is true that with a clear headed President and Secretary of State there would be no serious trouble with these new complication, but the blundering record made by the present administration in dealing with the foreign policy of this government, if it can truly be said to have had such a thing since March 4, 1893, has prepared the country to look for the wrong, rather than the right thing from it, in foreign as well as domestic matters.

The first and most important of the new complications arises from a Spanish warship having fired on a U. S. Mail Steamer —The Allianca—, which was passing near the coast of Cuba on its way from Colon to New York. Already the Spanish minister has assured the State Department of his belief that it was done by mistake and that Spain will apologize if this country after investigation thinks it proper. The next complication is in connection with the protest of the British Ambassador against the shooting of an officer of an English steamer during the recent levee riots at New Orleans, and the last with the demand of the Italian Ambassador that protection be given the Italians in the United States and that satisfaction be given for the late assassination of Italians at Walsenburg, Colorado. It largely depends upon Mr. Cleveland and Secretary Gresham what comes of these things.

Secretary Herbert is beginning to hear a great deal of the adverse criticism which has been leveled at him from all sections because he has only designated two naval vessels—the San Francisco and the Marblehead—to participate in the ceremonies attendant upon the opening of the Baltic and North Sea Canal by the Emperor of Germany, but he is obstinate, and although he admits the importance of the advent he refuses to change his original order. Naval officers are greatly chagrined. They point out that all the maritime nations will be strongly represented, and that commercial instinct, not to mention national pride should have been strong enough to have sent at least a half dozen of the finest ships in the navy to take part in the opening.

The Spanish minister has had a somewhat queer experience recently. He received letters from several alleged manufacturers of dynamite and other high explosives asking him to purchase explosives for the use of the Spanish army in Cuba, and when he declined he received other letters notifying him that if he did not at once purchase the explosive they would be gratuitously sent to the insurgents in Cuba to be used in destroying Spaniards and Spanish property. Opinion is divided as to whether the letters were the work of a crank or a professional blackmailer. Senor Muruage, the minister, declares that it is immaterial to him which, as he pays no attention to them.

There is much discussion, now that the arguments are all in, as to what the decision of the Supreme Court will be in the income tax case. The court today took a recess until the 25. inst., and it is expected that the decision will be handed down on that day. Among lawyers there seems to be considerable doubt as to the nature of the decision, but the overwhelming preponderance of opinion among those unlearned in the law is that the court will stand by previous decision and declare the tax constitutional. If it shouldn't the administration will be in a bad way. It will have difficulty in getting through the year even if the receipts from the income tax are up to the estimate, but if the tax is declared unconstitutional it cannot be collected at all, and the chances are that an extra session of Congress would have to be called to provide money, but Mr. Cleveland would not call it until the last minute, as it would be a triumph for Senator Gorman which that astute politician and determined enemy of Mr. Cleveland would not be slow to take advantage of

Some of those who helped to start the new silver party are already privately expressing their disgust at the manner in which the country has ignored the announcement of the birth of the party. Abuse, they say, they were prepared for, but silence contempt they object to, and that's about all they are getting.

McIntosh Items.

[From the Times.]

Tom Moit drove a car load of stock to Fertile for shipment over the Northern Pacific last week. This action on the part of shippers is made necessary by the inferior shipping facilites on this, the Great Northern line, which are so poor that shippers claim that a gain of from fifty cents to one dollar per hundred is made by driving to Fertile.

Ole Omlid got considerable under the influence last Tuesday and created a sensation by drawing a knife and offering to carve a few of our citizens free of charge. The disturbance started in Koppang's saloon and ended in M. S. Tveten & Co's store, where the coffee mill was demolished and the store generally turned topsy-turvy in the general fracus that proceded the arrest of the festive Ole by constable West. Five dollars and cost, or six days in jail, was the penalty imposed by Justice Gilmour the following morning, on the payment of which the prisoner was released. The penalty was only half severe enough.

H. H. McDougall and wife returned Wednesday after a protracted absence in the lumbering districts of Red Lake.

M. O. Homme, an old resident of the city, now of McIntosh, was visiting friends Wednesday.

Ole Olson and August Lutness have formed a partership and are building a wagon and repair shop south of J. Olson's blacksmith shop.

Mayor-elect Kretzschmar desires to express through the Press his appreciation for the loyal support given him on election day. For various reasons he is deprived of a more substantial method of showing his good will to his many friends and hopes that his gratitude thus expressed will be regarded fully as sincere as if shown in other ways.

Becoming Popular.

"The cause of equal rights in Lexington is evidently becoming popular," says The Press-Transcript. "Upon the register for those friendly to enfranchisement of women are the names of many of our most influential people, members of the bar, college professors, physicians, leading business men and scores of names of our prominent women, while a long list of names is also seen of those who approve of women voting for school trustees and making women eligible for positions on school boards. This list of names for school suffrage is to be sent to the next legislature to help enforce the claims of women to this school suffrage."

Irony of Fate.

It was the irony of fate that both Dr. Loomis, the celebrated New York specialist in pulmonary diseases, and his first wife should die of pneumonia. Dr. Loomis was one of the first prominent New York physicians to send his patients to the Adirondacks to try the curative properties of the air there, and nearly 30 years ago he built a cottage of his own in the North Woods, then only half explored and boasting only one hotel where now there are scores.—New York Correspondent.

From Bella Coola.

Elsewhere in this issue the JOURNAL presents an interesting communication from a son of the Rev. C. Saugstad, the founder of the Bella Coola colony, or "New Norway," as they call it. The letter was posted on Feb. 15th, and reached us on March 18th—only 32 days on the way. We well remember in 1872, when we first reached the Red River Valley, that it was considered the jumping off place but think of going 32 days farther away from civilization! As it was in this country when it was new, so it seems to be up there—some are discontented and ready to grumble. Our experience with humanity convinces us that could every human being now living be suddenly translated to paradise, there would be found many chronic grumblers who would discover something that would not suit. We have no doubt that the climate of "New Norway" is very good, but as to its desirability as a place of residence, that, to our notion, would depend mostly upon its market facilities, which, from its remoteness, would seem to us to be not as favorable as we have in this country, if the people have to depend upon farm products for a living. If they have other resources, that would be different. It must seem strange to people who are used to a prairie country to be suddenly dropped into a heavily wooded region and be obliged to clear up a farm before they can raise a crop.

From "New Norway."

BELLA COOLA, B. C., Feb. 14th, 1895.

As we have had so many letters informing us of the false rumors which are being circulated, I desire to say a few words concerning these ridiculous reports.

We landed here at Bella Coola on the 30th of October, 1894, after a very pleasant voyage across the continent and a week's stay in Victoria.

Our first month's stay here was not as pleasant as it might have been on account of rain a good deal of the time, and our only accommodations were small tents. But after a little the weather improved and the colonists began to hunt up their land which had been allotted to them on board the steamer, Princess Louise, amounting to 11,680 acres, being 160 acres to each male person of age.

There are now about thirty houses built, and in a short time there will be many more; but not just at present, as all hands are hard at work on the wagon road which is being built up through the valley.

The climate has been and is delightful, being just cold enough to have snow instead of slush and rain; there is, however, no frost in the ground, where the snow is laying in full depth which is about 18 inches.

The whole colony is well satisfied with their pioneer life, excepting the slow mail service through the winter, which though now will be improved.

The "habitual kickers" who went back represent only their own persons and their story of Bella Coola must be taken as their personal views only, as many of them did not even take the trouble to look at the land which was allotted to them.

As to the scandalous articles in the "Normanden," Grand Forks, and "Scandinaven," Chicago, and other papers who find it in their interest to send out big lies about the colony and especially the government of British Columbia and my father, they will in due time be answered.

We all send our best regards to our friends, informing them that we have enjoyed good health ever since we came to the Bella Coola Valley and as far as we know there has not been a single case of sickness and all have had abundance of good food, and that is also proved by that the great majority of the colony have been steadily gaining in weight.

My Wife Is Nervous

Says many a man and too often he is inclined to blame the poor, tired woman who cannot eat or sleep, whose whole life is filled with misery because her blood has become impoverished and her nervous system exhausted. She needs a building up medicine like Hood's Sarsaparilla. A few bottles will enrich and vitalize her blood, tone and strengthen her digestive organs, give her a good appetite, enable her to sleep soundly, banish her nervousness and bring back her smiles. Mr. J. W. Roberson, of Greenfield, Tenn., says: "My wife began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla about three months ago and she is now taking her third bottle. She has been in poor health for fifteen years. Hood's Sarsaparilla is doing her more good than any other medicine she has ever taken. Her appetite is better, she looks better and there has been improvement in every way."

DO YOU Want to be cured by the great specialist? Dr. A. L. Cole, so well and favorably known throughout the Northwest by his long residence and successful practice in this city, continues to cure all Nervous Chronic and Private diseases of both sexes. His name is a sufficient guarantee of prompt and perfect cure of every case he undertakes.

Young men suffering from the effects of indiscretion, who are weak in mind and body, despondent, wanting in confidence and incapable of fulfilling their mission in life and who realize their impending doom, should act at once and consult this successful specialist.

Married men and those contemplating matrimony who find themselves incapable of or who fear lest they cannot fulfill the duties expected of them, can be restored to perfect health, mental and physical.

Hidden losses—In many cases the loss occurs unobserved by the sufferer. To this hidden drain upon the nervous system may be attributed the cause of many diseases of the nerves, stomach, heart, kidneys and bladder. Thus we can account for a large proportion of all cases of epilepsy, palsey, paralysis, apoplexy, softening of the brain, insanity, loss of nervous and muscular power and similar affections.

THE MODERN OYSTER STEW.

A Middle Aged Man Contrasts It With the Stew of Before the War.

"When I was a boy, before the war," said a middle aged man, "the price of an oyster stew in a good ordinary restaurant was 12½ cents. The price has gradually gone up until now, in a good restaurant, an ordinary stew costs 25 cents. In the old restaurant there was a cloth upon the table, but this cloth, unless you happened to find it when it had just been put on, was apt to be frescoed with coffee stains. There were catchup and vinegar and so on, some of them perhaps in bottles in a caster. Perhaps the waiter gave you a pickle or two. The light was not very bright. The waiter brought the stew in an oyster plate, and as the hot broth washed about a little in the plate as he carried it and set it down you were afraid it might burn his thumb. But the oysters were good. Let me pause to remark that the oyster is something to be grateful for.

"Today the table, without a cloth perhaps, is cherry or mahogany, finely polished. For a cloth there is spread before you a napkin of ample dimensions and bright and fresh. The pickle is chopped up celery and very good. You get two kinds of crackers, and plenty of them; and a generous portion of French bread. The butter comes in a sightly little cone. The table furniture is all good—dishes, glass, everything. The spread before you is agreeable to the eye, and the whole scene is brilliantly lighted with the modern incandescent lamps. The stew comes in an oval dish that rests upon a plate. I don't like to eat out of such a dish so well as I do out of a plate, but you know at least there is no danger burning the waiter's thumb. The oysters are good; the whole arrangement is away beyond the stew of before the war. It costs more, but are we not better able to pay for it? For general get up and get and dash and style and comfort the old stew couldn't begin to compare with it. The modern oyster stew is one of many things that we do an everlasting sight better than we did."—New York Sun.

After his narrow escape Zeb Vaughan of Pasadena fell on his knees and thanked heaven for a miraculous deliverance from certain death. So would any one else who had been grasped in the iron clutch of a 1,400 pound grizzly while ten miles from a gun or a cabin. Zeb never lost his presence of mind and began tickling the bear's ear with a feather he had picked up absentmindedly, and the bear began laughing so hard that he could neither close his arms to squeeze nor his mouth to bite. Zeb continued tickling until the bear laughed so hard that he burst a blood vessel and fell down, dying.

A couple of Montana turkeys recently killed had taken into their aristocratic craws to assist in deglutition 13 valuable sapphires, several ounces of gold and just enough silver for change. It is now fashionable among Montana poultry to have jeweled interiors, and it is estimated that the emulous fowls of the new state have within 11 months of 1894 scratched up and swallowed $11,637,514.65 worth of gems and precious metals.

A girl in Kalamazoo who was not satisfied with squeezing a 26 inch waist into an 18 inch corset of the ordinary construction, devised one of rope yarn ribbed with clothesline. Thus arrayed she took a bath, when the wetted and contracting fiber brought the measurement down to 9½ inches. In delight she gasped: "Oh, haven't I got—a just lovely figure now? And it's—so loose—and comfortable."—New York Advertiser.

The Kaiser's Uniforms.

The task of looking after the uniforms and other costumes of the Emperor William is by no means a sinecure. All these different and greatly varying articles of attire, as diversified as those at the disposal of a star actor, are carefully kept, systematically arranged and in large wardrobes, and at the head of the department is an official entitled the obergarderobier, who has under his command two valets de chambre. The nautical uniforms are placed under the charge of an ex-subofficer of the German navy. Before the emperor undertakes any one of his many expeditions the obergarderobier is provided with an exhaustive list of all the dresses and other paraphernalia that will be required.—London Tit-Bits.

STATE LEGISLATURE

TWENTY-NINTH BIENNIAL SESSION

Tuesday, March 12.

SENATE—After two days of discussion Anderson's railroad land tax bill was defeated, lacking one vote of enough to pass.

Nearly a score of bills were recommended for passage at the evening session of the senate. The most important of these was the Jones thistle bill and Dr. Robillard's bill to establish a medical corps in the national guard.

HOUSE—By a vote of 77 to 11, the house decided to accept the invitation of Chairman McInnis of the committee on mines and minerals to visit the great mines in the northern part of the state on Thursday, Friday and Saturday of this week, the legislature adjourning for the week at Thursday noon. To make up the time it was decided to meet two evenings.

At the afternoon session of the house the bill to establish a fifth normal school at Duluth was passed after a two hours' debate by a vote of 78 to 17.

Wednesday, March 13.

SENATE—House File 1, the Anderson bill to tax unused railroad lands, passed the senate after a fight that has been waged with great earnestness. The senate had been in continuous session under a call of the senate from the moment of assembling at 2:30 in the afternoon until after 10 o'clock. The senators were imprisoned during that time by their own action while the sergeant-at-arms was hunting up absentees, and particularly Senator Cronkhite, who, up to the hour of adjournment, had not been found. The bill was finally passed and cinched by the usual motion to reconsider, lay on the table, etc.

HOUSE—The house passed five bills and recommended several others in committee of the whole.

Senator Cronkhite's bill to provide for the use of Minnesota stone caused some debate, but was recommended to pass.

Among the other important measures recommended to pass were the Itasca park bill, the Robbins Keely cure bill, Johns' bill to prevent the obstruction of public levees, Staples' bill relating to examination of teachers, and Dr. Zier's bill for the formation of a salvage corps. The bill for two additional judges in the Minneapolis district was indefinitely postponed.

Thursday, Feb. 14.

SENATE—After the presentation of petitions and introduction of a few bills the senate went to work on the calendar. Senator Ozmun's corrupt practice bill was passed with but one dissenting vote. It is S. F. [illegible], to prevent corrupt practices in elections, to limit the expenses of candidates and political committees, and to provide penalties, etc. Senator Iltis voted against the bill.

S. F. 180, the Jones thistle bill, was passed without opposition. It appropriates $25,000 for the destruction of the noxious weed.

Bills recommended to pass in committee of the whole:

To establish the office of state entomologist at the experiment station.

To reincorporate villages of 2,000 inhabitants and over.

To define vagrancy and provide punishment therefor.

To define and construe the words "railroad company" and "railroad" where the same occur in title 1, chap. 34, statutes of 1878.

To amend sec. 2, chap. 121, laws of 1887, to provide for public school libraries.

To amend sec. 13, chap. 65, statutes of 1878, relating to courts of justices of the peace.

Relating to the requisites of summons issued by justices of the peace.

To provide that a personal service of notices must be made before the right to redeem land or real property from sales for local improvements or other assessments can be extinguished.

To make adjacent lands to an incorporated village used as a cemetery part of such incorporation.

HOUSE—Minneapolis through Mayor Pratt, made the formal tender to the house of Loring park as a capitol site. The tender was a voluminous document. After considerable discussion the matter was referred to the judiciary committee. The house then adjourned.

Monday, March 18.

SENATE—Nearly the entire day was put in considering the municipal charter bill. Twenty-two of the 98 pages of the bill were gone over and a number of minor amendments were made. The bill was taken up under a special order.

HOUSE—Little was accomplished at the morning session of the house aside from the introduction of bills and the report of committees.

The house concurred in senate amendments to house bills relating to the sale of unclaimed baggage; establishing a medical corps for the national guard, and relating to territorial roads.

The house went into committee of the whole in the afternoon and took up the fish and game bill section by section.

A motion to strike out the appropriation entirely was voted down and an amendment to extend the open season for ducks and geese to April 15 was adopted. Mr. Leach proposed an amendment prohibiting hunters from entering upon any enclosed ground for the purpose of hunting, and the amendment was adopted, many members voting under a misapprehension.

When it came to the question of the appropriation for carrying out the provisions of the law there was another hot fight, with Representative Underwood in the lead, and Representative Jacobson making a hot second. Mr. Jacobson offered an amendment to reduce the appropriation to $15,000, the amount allowed under the old law, and $5,000 less than is proposed in the bill. Mr. Underwood's motion to strike out the appropriation clause was promptly voted down. A vote was then taken on Mr. Jacobson's amendment to cut the appropriation down and this was carried. The committee then recommended the bill for passage.

The evening session was held with small attendance, but good results. Over 20 bills were advanced to the calendar or promoted to general orders.

The Grand Jury System Abolished in South Dakota.

YANKTON, S. D., March 18.—One of the most important measures passed by the legislature was the abolition of the grand jury system in South Dakota. Under the new law all complaints are drawn by the county attorney, who may hear both sides of a case to determine if the facts will justify or warrant a probable conviction. The case is then tried by the petit jury in the usual way. This practically gives all criminal affairs into the hands of the county attorney, who has great opportunities for the abuse of his power.

HUDSON BAY ROAD.

Work Will Begin Within Three Weeks, It Is Asserted.

OTTAWA, Ont., March 18.—Within three weeks, work will be resumed on the Winnipeg and Hudson Bay railroad, 40 miles of which are already completed. Parliament in 1891 authorized the government to enter into contract with the company for the payment of $80,000 annually, ostensibly for the conveyance of mails, and men and supplies, in case of Indian troubles, over 150 miles of the lines between Winnipeg and Saskatchewan river, but the promoters were unable to raise capital in England, although this guarantee was supplemented by a land grant of 7,000,000 acres of land, applicable to the entire 675 miles of the road.

Secured a Big Loan.

Negotiations for better terms have been going on ever since and the company has at last been successful in inducing the government to advance a loan of $2,500,000. The Canadian Pacific fought hard to prevent the bargains going through, as the line will divert the bulk of the Northwest traffic to the seaboard.

But the necessity of doing something to win the support of Manitoba and the Territories in the approaching general elections prevailed with the government and the deal went through Friday.

A line connecting San Francisco with Hudson Bay is talked of as an early probability.

DEAD IN THEIR SHANTY.

Three Hunters Evidently Poisoned by Their Own Carelessness.

CHIPPEWA FALLS, Wis., March 18.—A horrible discovery was made by a party of men hunting in the neighborhood of Ingram. The dead bodies of Ed Duffney, John Hanson and another man were found in an old lumber shanty. From all appearances they had been dead a number of days, the bodies being frozen stiff. Duffney and Hanson were formerly employed by Alvord as woodsmen, but quit work to hunt wolves, using poison to kill them with. The supposition is that in preparing supper they accidentally got poison mixed with the food, carrying everything in the same sack. Their dog was found dead in the same room.

ADVANCED WAGES.

The Connellsville Cokers Receive Very Pleasing Notices.

MOUNT PLEASANT, Pa., March 16.—Not since the halcyon days of the old syndicate has the Connellsville coker received such pleasant news as came to the almost 10,000 employes of the Frick and Southwest companies at noon when notices were posted at all their works, stating that an advance in wages averaging about 15 per cent will go into effect on April 1st next. The rate for mining per 100 bushels goes from 78 to 90 cents, drawing, from 43 to 50 cents and so on down through the various grades of labor. The yard laborer is the only person who gets no advance, his pay remaining at $1.20 per day.

REFUSED TO INDICT.

Perjury Charges Against Miss Wachtler and Grindall Come to Naught.

MINNEAPOLIS, March 16.—The grand jury has concluded not to indict Maggie Wachtler and George A. Grindall for perjury in the Hayward case. The state had confidently expected to secure a conviction of the latter, although it had not expected to do so in Miss Wachtler's case. The action of the grand jury is, therefore, a surprise and somewhat of a disappointment to Blixt's attorney, at whose instigation the investigation was begun.

A LIVELY TIME.

Chicago Police Armed with Revolvers Take a Hand in Religious Exercises.

CHICAGO, March 16.—About 200 angry Poles, men and women, stormed St. Hedwig's Catholic church at North Hoyne avenue and Kosciusko. Five police, who were on guard, were cowed by the mob, but on the arrival of reinforcements the rioters were driven off at the points of drawn revolvers.

A MYSTERIOUS MISSION.

South Dakota's Attorney General Hurriedly Starts East.

PIERRE, S. D., March 16.—Attorney General Crawford has gone east on a mysterious mission, supposed to be connected with the Taylor matter. He left hurriedly after receiving a dispatch, and managed to avoid all questioners. It is the general impression that he has gone to Washington to secure papers necessary to extradite Taylor from Mexico. It is known that Taylor has powerful friends and influences back of him, and the state officers desire to be thoroughly prepared for the vigorous fight they will have to make before Taylor is brought back to American soil.

LOOKS LIKE TAYLOR.

Believed at Sioux Falls That Detectives Are on the Wrong Track.

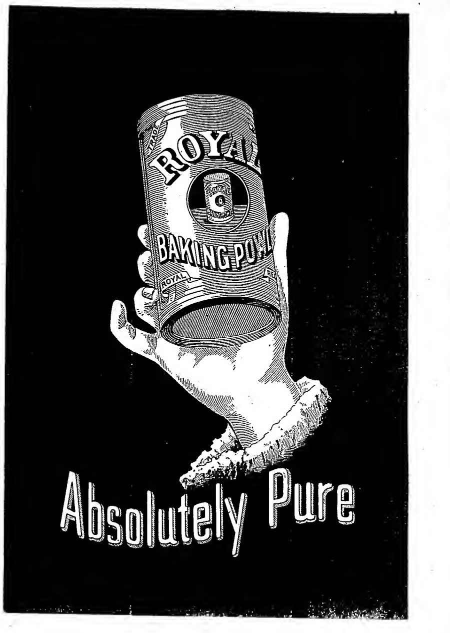
SIOUX FALLS, S. D., March 16.—It is thought here that the man arrested for W. W. Taylor in Mexico was Cyrus Watts of this city, who is there and due at Vera Cruz about the time of the arrest. Watts is singularly like Taylor and such a mistake is quite probable.

Prohibit Importation of Silver.

CAPE TOWN, March 18.—The governor of the Transvaal Republic has informed the banks that it has decided to strictly prohibit any further importation of foreign silver coin. It is added, however, that the foreign silver coin already in the Transvaal will be allowed to circulate in that country.

Diamond Cutters to Be Deported.

WASHINGTON, March 18.—Secretary Carlisle has rendered a decision in the diamond cutter case, in which he holds that diamond cutting is not a new industry within the meaning of the act of 1885, and therefore the several diamond cutters who were brought to this country some months ago under contract to engage in diamond cutting must be deported.



WANTS TO BE A SLAVE.

A Young Married Woman Who Refuses to Be Emancipated.

Very often when a young married woman starts housekeeping she is favored with a circular from the Women's Emancipation league as well as with various more or less tasty literature dealing with "sexual" matters from an advanced point of view. The Emancipators address her in this strain:

"Recognizing that the slavery of sex is the root of all slavery, and that injustice to womanhood, especially injustice within the family, is the perpetual source of all other injustice, it (the "league") seeks the legal, political, social and industrial emancipation of women, as the vital and indispensable condition of all other true lasting reforms, and affirms these claims as paramount to all personal, sectional or party consideration whatever."

I have a deep rooted aversion to slavery in all shapes. There are women slaves among us, as there are men slaves. When I find a woman slave, I shall be happy to assist in emancipating her. But this does not prevent my sympathizing with the writer of the following letter:

"SIR—I am a married woman—I think I may say girl—of three months' standing, just entered with joy and hopefulness upon what I have been taught to believe the highest and noblest duties of woman. It may be that my belief and my hopes are delusions; that I am no better than a slave, and that if I submit to the injustice in store for me I shall become a party to all the other wrongs in the world. But is it kind to tell me this just now? Mightn't I be left to find out my mistake for myself? When I do, won't it be time enough to join the Emancipation league? I think it would, so I am trying to keep my delusion and my annual subscription until I have I seen how my lord and master treats his unfortunate slave."—London Truth.

Quotation Marks.

"Quotation marks are not infrequently misused in signs," said a stroller, "the marks being placed about names, as, for instance, the name of a place, or about some descriptive phrase in a sign, though the word or the phrase may really not be a quotation at all, but I am never surprised at any misuse of quotation marks, for I cannot forget a very singular idea concerning them that I had myself in my earlier days. I used to think that single quotation marks about anything meant that the words inclosed were sort of partly quoted, more or less, whatever that may mean. Perhaps that isn't a very distinct statement, but I remember well that I was quite tickled when later I learned that quotation marks were not signs to be used at the fancy of the writer, but might properly be used only to indicate actual quotations."—New York Sun.

In a short time Mr. Brown appeared before the convention and stated that he was duly thankful for the honor and felt highly grateful at receiving a nomination from a republican convention, said he was tired out with a long trip to Iowa and would not take time to say all that he would like but would, if elected as mayor of this city, allow his official actions to speak for him. If elected he would go into the office unpledged and would do all in his power to administer the affairs of the office to the best interests of the city.

When Mr. Brown retired from the hall the business of the hour was resumed. The name of W. A. Lanctot for city clerk, was proposed and there being no other name presented a motion prevailed to suspend the rules and instruct the secretary to cast the ballot for Mr. Lanctot.

For city treasurer, the names of O. O. Christianson, C. N. Lindell and L. W. Larson were presented.

For second justice the names of I. U. Jennings and John McLean were presented resulting in the selection of John McLean on the first formal ballot.

Wm. Bloom and A. A. Glenn were selected as candidates for constables and the convention then got down to the business of selecting a candidate for alderman at large.

T. H. Bjoin and C. E. Sawyer were placed in nomination, and trotted a few heats neck and neck, Sawyer finally winning on a vote of 12 to 11.

The committee on resolutions submitted the following:

REPUBLICAN PLATFORM.

The Republican party of the City of Crookston, in convention assembled, for the purpose of nominating candidates for the various city offices, hereby make and publish to the people of the city of Crookston, the following as its declaration of principles:

1. That the direct responsibility now assumed by distinct political organizations will be beneficial to our city as well as our nation, in evoking a higher patriotism, and securing the best efforts of our people for the city's welfare.

2. That the responsibility for the city's administration should rest upon the party in power.

3. That we demand a just, equitable and strict enforcement of the law and city ordinances, and in such manner as is conducive to the best interest of the city, and condemn any and all attempts to manipulate or truckle with the ordinances or law in any manner for political purposes.

4. That the only efficient remedy for our depressed business conditions is by the employment of labor, and the protection of labor industries. That the principles of protection to labor and industrial enterprises, advocated and upheld by the Republican party, are the principles which will surely restore prosperity to our nation, and drive poverty and its attendant miseries from the homes of our people.

5. We favor the city offering such encouragement as will secure and promote manufacturing industries in our city, thereby giving employment to our resident laborers and mechanics, especially during the winter months.

6. That the city make all its improvements as early in the spring as the ground will admit, thereby giving employment to our resident laborers at a season of the year when work is scarce and before the harvest commences. That our resident laborers and mechanics be given all the city's employment on all public and private improvements, thereby advancing their condition and comforts, and thus promote the business interests of the city, and resulting in a mutual benefit.

7. That our health or sanitary laws be rigidly enforced, by having filthy streets, alleys and yards cleaned, and cess-pools abated, thereby giving more work to our resident laborers, and thus promoting the health and happiness of our people.

8. We favor greater efforts being made on the part of our busines men to secure and provide a good market for the farm products of our county tributary to our city.

9. That we rely on the strength of our principles and the fitness of our nominees for success and not in personal abuse of our opponents

Relying upon the wisdom, justice and truth of the foregoing declaration of principles, we cordially invite the co-operation with us, of all citizens of the City of Crookston, regardless of their former political affiliations and ask that they share with us in the responsibility and the mutual benefits resulting from success.

On motion the chairman appointed the following gentlemen as

MADE UP AGAIN

Mr. and Mrs. Van Tuyl Decide to Patch up Their Differences And Live on as One.

[Grand Forks Plaindealer.]

The trial of D. Overholt and Mrs. Van Tuyl of Maple Lake, who were arrested in this city several days ago on complaint of Mr. Van Tuyl charging that his wife was attempting to elope, came up before Judge Dwyer this afternoon. The two defendants were on hand, the prosecution being represented by County Attorney Gossman of Crookston. Mr. Van Tuyl the complaining witness failed to appear and the county attorney moved to dismiss, to which request the judge complied.

It appears that after meeting and discussing the thing from every standpoint the several parties finally came to an understanding, and Mr. and Mrs. Van Tuyl finally decided to kiss and make up again. Van Tuyl refused to appear as a witness against his wife and the case had to be dropped.

HOW DO YOU LIKE IT?

Crookston, Minn., Special, Mar. 21, —The Democratic convention held here tonight nominated the following candidates: Mayor, John R. McKinnon; clerk, W. A. Lancot; treasurer, O. O. Christianson; assessor, C. H. Mix; justices of the peace, Geo. H. Holt and John McLean; constables, A. A. Glenn and Wm. Bloom; alderman at large, Elias Steenerson. The Republican convention will be held here tomorrow night.

The above is a report of the so-called "citizens convention" that was sent from this city to the Pioneer Press and shows the tactics of democracy plainly. In the general apathy that preceded the scheme seemed to be to get as many Republicans committed to a "citizens ticket" as possible getting their pledge to support such a movement and then, after they were successful claim another "great democratic victory" and should the ticket win that is the way it would be reported. Republicans who were deceived in that manner need not feel in duty bound to stand by the democratic ticket, when they can see the "wood chuck" as plainly as that.

FOUR FIREMEN KILLED.

Horribly Mangled and Burned at a Denver Hotel Blaze.

DENVER, March 25.—Four firemen lost their lives in the fire in the St. James hotel during the morning. They were: Harold Hartwell, captain; S. B. Rawley, lieutenant; Richard Dandeyrd, fireman; Steve Martin, fireman. All were members of Hose Company No. 3 and all except Captain Hartwell were colored men. They went down with the floor of the rotunda and were horribly mangled and burned.

There were 165 guests in the hotel, all of whom escaped uninjured. The damage by the fire amounted to about $40,000, about half on the building and half on the furniture.

LOSS OF A MILLION.

Plant of the Reid Packing Company at Kansas City Destroyed.

KANSAS CITY, March 25.—At 6:30 o'clock a fire broke out in the hog building of the Reid Packing company's plant at Kansas and Railroad avenues, Kansas City, Kan., and almost the entire group of buildings was entirely destroyed, causing a loss of over $1,000,000. The following buildings were destroyed: The 3-story hog building, the storage building, four stories high, five icehouses, the enginehouse and the beefhouse.

Bodies Recovered.

EVANSTON, Wyo., March 23.—Four more bodies have been recovered from the Red Canon mine, making 23 bodies recovered. There are good prospects that the other bodies will be recovered, as the ventilation in the mine is getting better. A general funeral will take place on Sunday.

Dr. LeGuee Vindicated.

The celebrated veterinary case against Dr. M. G. LeGuee came off before Judge Jennings and a jury on Wednesday afternoon, of last week, too late for us to get the result, which was in favor of the doctor. The trial developed the fact that Dr. LeGuee, as a veterinary surgeon, is no spring chicken—no tenderfoot, on the other hand he is a graduate of one of the best veterinary colleges in the country and has practiced for years. He was a veterinary surgeon when he came to this county in the early day, but like many others he was beguiled by the idea that a fortune could be made in a very short time raising wheat, so he took a claim and went into that line of business for awhile, leaving his regular business in abeyance for the time being. In fact so infatuated did he become with this pursuit; wheat-raising, that very few who became acquainted with "Farmer Mike" knew that he was a skilled veterinary surgeon, a graduate of one of the best veterinary colleges in the country. As soon, however, as he became convinced that as a wheat-raiser he was not a brilliant success, he went back to his regular avocation and has since become known as one of the most skillful and successful veterinary surgeons of the county, and this fact was brought out on the witness stand by practical farmers and horsemen. S. L. Collins, one of the leading livery men of the city, than whom no better authority exists in the county, said: "I consider Dr. LeGuee one of the best veterinary surgeons I ever knew." The result of the trial was a complete vindication of Dr. LeGuee as well as a great victory for him. The friends of the doctor were confident all the time that he would come out of it all right and were rejoiced that their confidence was so well grounded.

THE BEST SIRE.

Contrary to general opinion the instructors at the dairy convention held in this city on the 15th and 16th took the ground that the older the sire the better the progeny. Said Mr. Gregg: "If I was to select a leader for my dairy herd I should look for a bull not less than eight years old, and I should not be afraid to keep him for several years longer than breeders generally think it profitable. I believe that inbreeding, in certain cows is beneficial; I know this would be considered rank heresy by many experienced breeders but I can prove its truth all the same. Most of people also think they must have a young sire—this I believe to be another common error which time will eradicate." Others, speaking on the same subject took the same view.

One year ago this spring the Republican party decided to put a party ticket into the field, the reason for which was the pressure brought to bear upon the party by the rank and file who wanted to follow the old flag in city as well as other elections. Many of the leaders in the party opposed the idea but the masses wanted it, and after holding several meetings the masses won and the ticket went into the field. In the meetings that were held it was agreed that this should be the future policy of the party, but now that a Republican party ticket has been placed in the field we find some Republicans kicking and raising a big howl about it. It is a well-known fact that if any man or set of men have a scheme to work, they always like to get into the field on a non-partisan basis, because that method affords the best opportunity for them to work their schemes. The JOURNAL does not say that the leaders of the Democratic ticket now in the field have any particular scheme that they want to work—unless it be to win a party victory in the guise of a citizen's ticket, but it is a fact that they commenced a most vigorous howling and kicking just as soon as the Republican party announced its intention of placing a ticket in the field. It is an old saying that where there is lots of smoke there is some fire somewhere. Look out for the fire.

SMUT IN WHEAT.

University Experiment Station.

ST. ANTHONY PARK, MINN.
MAR. 5' 1893.

Wheat "bunt" or "stinking smut in wheat" has done great damage to the yields and quality of the wheat crop in the Northwest during the past year. Hon. A. C. Clausea, chief grain inspector of Minnesota, estimates that one-fourth of the wheat crop of 1894 sent to the general markets from the three states tributary to Minnesota's terminal markets was more or less effected by stinking smut. The trouble appeared mainly in the northern parts of these states.

A year ago this station published a bulletin calling attention to smut in wheat, and prescribed a remedy. Farmers had not awakened to the importance of remedial measures, but the indications now are that all are anxious to know the best means by which they can avoid loss from smutted grain. Millers and grain dealers are throughly aroused to the importance of preventing smut from injuring the yields, and especially the quality of our wheat and flour and the reputation of these commodities in domestic and foreign markets.

Treating wheat with blue stone or with hot water costs only a small porportion of the value lost in growing smutty crops, and these remedies are very effective. All seed wheat can be treated at a cost of one to three cents per acre. Blue stone of good quality may be purchased by groceries or druggists so that they can retail it to farmers at about ten to fifteen cents per pound. In Manitoba stinking smut was very prevalent a few years since; now very little of it can be found, as the farmers use large quantities of blue stone. At Brandon, Manitoba, alone, a town of a few thousand inhabitants, two or three carloads have been purchased for the year's demand.

Bunt or stinking smut of wheat is a disease caused by small spores. These are very small, seed-like, spherical bodies which are produced in the diseased kernels of wheat. These kernels are broken in threshing and handling the grain and the minute spores scattered about cling to the grains of wheat. When the seeds are planted the spores germinate much like small seeds, and some of them lying on the kernel against the sprouting plantlet send their thread-like stems into the wheat plant. Here the disease thrives, branches, grows upward as the wheat grows, and when the wheat forms its seed some of the branches of the smut will have found their way into the kernels of wheat. If chance favors them they germinate on another young and tender wheat plant. These smut spores are very small and we cannot dis-

JUST BY CHANCE.

Of course nothing really comes by chance, but there is a good deal of truth in the statement attributed to Thomas A. Edison, that several of his most important discoveries were made when he was looking for something else. The fall of an apple was a revelation of a natural law to Isaac Newton. The discovery that glass could be made from molten sand was an accident. James Watt invented the steam-engine, but he was so wedded to low pressure engines, with their cumbrous condensing apparatus, that if he had had his way, a high pressure engine would never have been built, and high-speed locomotives would have been impossible. George Stephenson turned the exhaust steam of his locomotive into the smokestack, not to increase the draught, but because people complained that horses were frightened by the escaping steam. Without the forced draught, fast running would have been almost hopeless. The railroad systems of the United States, however, did not come by chance, but are the result of long years of hard labor, close calculation, careful economy, and far-seeing plans for the future. The seven thousand miles of the Burlington Route is not a chance growth, or the creature of circumstances. Buy your ticket via this line for a long or short journey, and the close connections, uniform speed, character of equipment, and care taken of passengers, will convince that only constant vigilance could bring such results. CHAPTER XIV.

AN UNWELCOME PRISONER.

It was 8 o'clock in the morning. Colonel Maynard pushed back the tent flap, intending to step outside and go to the mess tent for breakfast. The brightness of the morning seemed reflected in his countenance. His step was firm, his bearing full of youthful, manly vigor. He had been rapidly gaining the confidence of his officers and was coming to be admired and beloved by his men. All misgivings as to his fitness for his responsible position had melted away. Colonel Mark Maynard was the man most to be envied of those no older than himself in the Army of the Cumberland.

He had scarcely passed from his tent when, glancing down the road beside which his camp was located, his attention was arrested by an ambulance coming slowly along driven by a man in a soldier's blouse and smoking a short clay pipe. On either side rode a cavalryman. The colonel paused to watch the coming vehicle and its attendants. Had it not been guarded he would have supposed it to contain a sick soldier going to hospital. As it was, it must either hold an officer of high rank or a sick or wounded prisoner. Whatever it contained, there came to the man watching it an uncomfortable feeling that it was in some way a link between himself and misfortune. The bright, happy look of a moment before disappeared, to be replaced by a troubled expression, though he could not have given a reason for foreboding. When the ambulance stopped opposite his tent, he muttered with a knitted brow:

"What does this mean?"

One of the attendants dismounted, went to the door of the ambulance, opened it and handed out a woman, who descended to the ground with some difficulty, as though in a weakened condition. The two then came directly to where Colonel Maynard was standing.

The woman was attired in a striped calico dress. Her head and face were bare. The colonel knew at a glance that he had seen her before, but could not tell where. She walked slowly, for she seemed scarcely able to drag herself along, and he had time to study her features as she came on. The two stopped before him. The soldier saluted, and drawing an envelope from his belt handed it to Colonel Maynard. The colonel took it without looking at it. He was still studying the features of the woman.

"A communication from General ——, colonel," said the man who handed him the paper. As the soldier spoke Colonel Maynard recognized the woman he had met at Mrs. Fain's. His hand trembled as he grasped the envelope and tore it open.

HEADQUARTERS —— DIVISION,
ARMY OF THE CUMBERLAND,
IN THE FIELD, Sept. —, 1862.

Colonel Mark Maynard, Commanding the —th Cavalry Brigade:

COLONEL—I send you a woman who this morning was caught tampering with the telegraph line, and who has evidently been taking off our dispatches. Being in transit and about to move on this morning, I take the liberty to send her to you under guard, with the suggestion that you do with her as seems best to you. I have use for the limited number of men present for duty on my escort, and this is my apology for troubling you. Yours is the nearest command to which I can send her. I am very respectfully your obedient servant,

Brigadier General.

Colonel Maynard read the missive over twice, slowly, without looking up. He had not read a dozen words before he knew that he held in his possession one whose life was forfeited as his own life had been forfeited to the Confederates a year before. His keeping his eyes on the paper was to gain time, to avoid speaking when his utterance was choked with a strange emotion. His thoughts were far away. He stood on the bank of the Tennessee river below Chattanooga. It was in the gray of the morning. He saw a skiff tied to the shore. He jumped down to seize it and found himself among a group of Confederate soldiers.

Personating a member of General Bragg's staff, he commanded them to row him across the river. They started to obey. As they left the shore suddenly a boat swung around Moccasin point. It was full of armed men. He was taken back to Chattanooga, tried and condemned to be hanged for a spy.

All this passed before his mind's eye as he stood pretending to study the communication before him, not this bare statement of it, but each detail, each feeling of hope, fear, despair, as they rapidly succeeded each other from the moment of his capture till his escape and safe return to the Union lines.

Looking up at last with an expression of commiseration which surprised the prisoner, he said:

"Madam, will you please accept my heartfelt sympathies?"

Miss Baggs, who had already recognized Colonel Maynard, simply bowed her head in acknowledgment without speaking, but fixing her large dark eyes upon his. When placed in a similar position, Maynard had met his enemy's glance with affected coolness in a vain hope of deception. Not so the woman before him. The time for deception had passed with her. She was a Charlotte Corday, knowing that only the guillotine awaited her, a martyr in whose eyes gleamed the divine light of a willing sacrifice to a cause she believed to be sacred.

The colonel spoke again:

"Madam," he said, "it is my duty to report your case to my commanding officer for transmission to the headquarters of this army. There is a little house across the road. If you are able to go there, you will be more comfortable while we are awaiting the reply."

"As you like, colonel."

"Perhaps it would be better to use the ambulance."

"I can walk. I would prefer it."

"Will you accept my assistance?"

She took his offered arm, and the two walked slowly toward a farmhouse a few hundred yards distant. As the colonel passed a sentry he directed him to have the officer of the guard summoned and sent to him. On reaching the house and mounting the few steps that led up to the door, they were received by a farmer's wife and ushered into a small sitting room. Bowing to the prisoner, Colonel Maynard stepped outside to instruct the guard. It was not essential that he should hasten, but he did not feel equal to an interview.

After seeing a sentinel posted on each side of the house Maynard turned to go to his tent. He was drawn by some unaccountable instinct to look once more at the abode of his prisoner. She was gazing out at him with a pair of eyes melancholy, unresisting, full of resignation.

What fiend had suddenly thrown this beautiful woman, this queen of martyrs, into his keeping, with death staring her in the face, and he perhaps to inflict the penalty? Why, if he must suffer this turning of the tables by fate, could not the victim have been a man, some coarse creature who would die like a brute? And why had it not come upon him before love had introduced him to that instinctive delicacy, that gentleness, those finer heart impulses of woman?

"O God!" he murmured, "suppose—suppose she were—Laura?"

He could not bear to look and could not turn away. For a few moments the two gazed upon each other, while the woman's natural feminine discernment told her that she was pitied; told her something of what Maynard suffered; that her enemy was really her friend. She gave him a faint smile in recognition.

There was something in the smile that was even harder for him to endure than had she shed a tear. Hers was a winning smile, and her position was so desperate. She was so brave, so ready to sacrifice for her struggling people. She bore her trial with such gentleness, yet with such firmness.

She was a woman, and she must die.

He turned almost fiercely and strode back to his tent. Reaching it, he found the man who had brought the prisoner waiting for him. The soldier saluted and handed him another envelope.

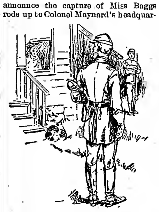
"Why did you not give me this with the other?" asked Maynard, surprised.

"I handed it to you, colonel, but you did not see it."

Maynard stared at the man without making any reply. He had been preoccupied, deprived of his ordinary faculties. Opening the envelope, he took out a small bundle of papers, on the back of which was indorsed, "Intercepted dispatches found on the person of Elizabeth Baggs, captured Sept. —, 1863."

Without looking at their contents he dismissed the man who had brought them, and turning went into his tent.

It was noon before the courier sent to announce the capture of Miss Baggs rode up to Colonel Maynard's headquarters and handed him a dispatch. It was as Maynard feared. He was informed that in the present exigency the matter could not be given attention at general headquarters, but it was deemed important to deal summarily with spies, be they male or female. He was therefore ordered to convene a "drumhead" court martial, try the prisoner, and if found guilty execute the sentence, whatever it might be, without delay.



Looking at his prisoner.

When Colonel Maynard read this order, every vestige of color left his face. He could not believe the evidence of his senses. Was it possible that he, Mark Maynard, once condemned to be executed for a spy, was called upon to superintend the trial and the execution which would doubtless follow of another for the same offense, and that other a woman? Yet there were the instructions duly signed "By order," and only one meaning could be attached. He held it listlessly in his hand for awhile and then handed it to his chief of staff.

"At what hour shall the court come together, colonel?"

"I presume at once. The order so directs, doesn't it."

"How about the witnesses?"

"You will have to send to the source from which the prisoner came to us."

"In that event I will fix the hour for 3 o'clock this afternoon. The judge advocate will require a little time to prepare the charges and specifications."

"As you think best."

Colonel Maynard turned and went into his tent. Hours passed, and he did not come out. "The colonel is in trouble," said one. "They say he was once in the secret service himself," said another. "Then he knows how it is to be in such a fix as the woman up in that house." "He's been there." "It was at Chattanooga a year ago. They say he brought the news of Bragg's advance into Kentucky." "Well, if he has to execute a sentence of death on a spy, and that spy a woman, I wouldn't be in his boots for the shoulder straps of a major general."

And so the comments went on while the colonel kept his tent and Miss Baggs peered dreamily out of the window, watched by guards.

CHAPTER XV.

TRIED.

When Corporal Ratigan left Miss Baggs with the general, to whom he had unwillingly conducted her, he was in such a condition of mind that he forgot all about his horse and started to walk toward his camp. When a cavalryman shows such evidence of absence of mind, it is a sure sign that he is in a condition bordering on insanity. Ratigan walked some distance before it occurred to him that he was pursuing an unusual means of locomotion; then he turned back to get his horse. When he arrived at the place from which he had departed, Miss Baggs had gone. Mounting, he rode to his own camp, and upon reaching there he first went directly to his tent; then, shunning his comrades, stole away to a wood and threw himself on his face in the shade of a large tree and gave himself up to grief.

"O Lord, O Lord," he moaned, "if they'd organized corps of lovely women to be attached to each division of the army and the enemy, there'd be no more fightin for either cause. Each would fight the other about the women and the cause would hev to take care of itself."

"Corporal Ratigan!"

The corporal put his hands to his ears and groaned.

"Corporal Ratigan, I say."

Still the corporal would not hear. He knew that some one was approaching, for whether he would or not he could not help hearing his name called, each time more distinctly. Presently a soldier stood looking down at him.

"Corporal Ratigan," he said, "yer wanted at the headquarters of Colonel Maynard, commanding the —th brigade."

"What's that for?" asked the corporal without changing his position.

"Witness for court martial."

Why will people ask questions explanatory of disagreeable events or misfortunes, the answers to which they know well enough already? And why, when the information comes, will they deny its truth?

"If yo say that again, Conover, Oi'll break every bone in yer body."

"What's the mather wid ye, corporal?"

Ratigan by this time had got up from the ground, where he was lying, and approached his tormentor.

"Don't ask me, Conover, me boy."

"Why, Rats, yar lookin as if ye were goin to be tried yerself."

"Tried? Oi'm to suffer on the rack as one of me ancesters did once in the old Tower in Lunnon."

"How's that?"

"Oh, don't ask me, don't ask me. Oi can niver endure this trial. Oi'll doi, Oi'll doi."

"Come, brace yerself, me boy. Yer in no condition to be goin before a court. What is it all anyway?"

"What is it all? A woman to be tried for her life. And I caught her. Oi'm to bear witness against her. O God, if they'd let me off by tyin me up by the thumbs, buckin and gaggin, carryin a log on me shoulders, drummed out of camp with shaved head and feathers behind me ears. O Lord, O Lord, Oi'll doi, Oi'll doi!"

The corporal mounted his horse and was soon jogging along at a snail's pace toward Colonel Maynard's headquarters. There he was directed to where the court was sitting.

"Corporal Ratigan, you're late," said the president sternly.

The corporal saluted, but said nothing. He was directed to wait till some preliminaries had been disposed of, and he took position in a corner. It needed all the strength of which he was possessed to maintain himself on his legs, and he tried to keep his eyes from looking about the courtroom. He feared that if they rested on the prisoner, even for a moment, he would sink down on the floor, a heap of blue uniform and boots. Nevertheless the eyes will not always be controlled. Despite his efforts, Ratigan's gave involuntary glances here and there until suddenly they rested on the object they were expected to avoid, sitting opposite, surrounded by guards, pale, but self possessed, and a pair of glorious eyes looking at him with such sympathy and encouragement that the poor man felt as if the windows of heaven had been opened and an angel was looking out to give him strength. Once his eyes were riveted on hers there was no getting them away until he was suddenly aroused by a voice.

"Corporal Ratigan!"

Mechanically he staggered to a place designated as a witness stand, and holding on to the back of a chair steadied himself to give his testimony.

"State how you first saw the prisoner tampering with the telegraph line yesterday morning, Sept. —," said the judge advocate, an officer very tall, very slender and very serious looking.

"Oi didn't see her at all."

"What?"

"It was too dark to see anything."

"Well, state what you did see."

"I only thought I saw something."

"Come, come," said the president sternly, "we have no time to waste. Tell the story of the capture."

Thus commanded, the corporal braced himself to give the desired account.

"Oi was ridin to camp—after havin posted the relief, and comin along the road—it was the road Oi was comin along. Oi—Oi—colonel, it was so dark none of ye could have seen yer hand before yer face." The corporal stopped and gave evidence of sinking on the floor.

"Well, go on."

"There was somethin black in the road or by the side of it. Oi stopped to listen. Then Oi thought some one might be tamperin with the line—mind ye, Oi only thought it—and Oi called on whoiver it was to surrender. Then Oi heard a 'get up,' and whativer it was dashed off. Oi followed it as fast as iver Oi could, callin on 'em to stop and firin me Colt. Divil a bit did any one stop."

The corporal paused again. It looked as if he were not going to get any farther.

"Go on, my man."

"Well, then we came to the camp of General ——'s division, and I was halted by the guards, while what Oi had seen got ahead. So Oi lost sight of it entirely."

"Proceed."

"Well, wasn't it the fault of the guards stoppin me, and lettin the other go on, and no fault of mine?"

"Go on."

"What's the use of goin on? Oi lost sight of what was tamperin with the wires."

"But you overtook it."

"How can Oi swear it was the same?"

There was a smile on the faces of those present. The questioner seemed puzzled at the corporal's device to avoid testifying against the prisoner.

"Did you not ride on and overtake what you had seen?"

"Divil a bit."

"I know better. You went on and found something in the road. What did you find?"

"Oi didn't find what Oi'd seen."

"What had you seen?"

"Didn't Oi tell ye it was so dark that Oi couldn't see anything?"

"That won't do, corporal. You certainly followed something. Now, on coming up with it, what did you find it to be?"

"It wasn't what Oi followed. That, whativer it was, had gone out with the mornin light. Oi reckon it was something ghostly."

"Nonsense. Did you not find the prisoner lying in the grass?"

"Oi did," replied the witness, as if his heart would break, and he again showed signs of collapse.

"And you had reason to believe it was the person driving the buggy you followed?"

"Oi didn't see any buggy. It was so dark"—

"Well"—impatiently—"the person driving whatever it was you saw."

"How could Oi know that?"

"It was natural to infer that, there being a horse and buggy near, the prisoner had been driving it."

"There was no buggy."

"Well, the pieces."

"Now Oi would ask the court," said Ratigan, steadying himself to impress the members with the probability of his position, "if the person or whativer it was Oi saw tamperin with the wire moightent have turned off on another road and Oi suddenly lighted on this one?"

"That'll do, corporal. You may step out and give the next witness your place."

The next witness was an officer from the camp to which the prisoner had first been taken after her capture. He testified that upon a proposition to search her she had voluntarily produced the dispatches, which were shown to him in court, and he identified them as the same as those she had given up.

A reading of these dispatches was called for, and they were read.

In addition to those Miss Baggs deciphered when at the Fain plantation were two others, which were as follows:

CRAWFISH SPRINGS, Ga., Sept. 14, 1863.

Mobile Burton you when on has from other bob from re-eaforced Quadroon count us that to wet applause will can your undoubtedly century points orange Benjamin and been coming we join telegraphs.

Pinned to this telegram was a paper bearing an attempt at explanation in the prisoner's handwriting:

To Burton (probably Burnside) on your coming can we count
when can we count on your coming?
Applause (some person, probably the signer) telegraphs been re-enforced from some one telegraphs that Quadroon (probably Bragg) has been re-enforced from other points.

WASHINGTON, Sept. —, 1863.

Potts ready we result condition us if separated goes Jack all badly rapidly attack scattered the twentieth and doodle D shall but I in the hut well plaster Arabia are up should present dread the concentrated jet be by should our enemy closing we to.

There was no attempted explanation with this telegram. Either the prisoner had made no headway with it, or she had not sufficient time, probably both, though it was more difficult to decipher than any of the others.

These telegrams had been sent to general headquarters and an interpretation of them furnished, which was read to the court:

CRAWFISH SPRINGS, Ga., Sept. 14, 1863.

To Burnside:

Halleck telegraphs that you will join us. When can we count on your coming? Bragg has undoubtedly been re-enforced from Virginia and other points. ROSECRANS.

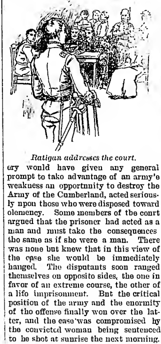
CRAWFISH SPRINGS, Ga., Sept. 16, 1863.

To the Secretary of War:

All goes well. We are badly separated, but closing up rapidly. If the enemy should attack us in our present scattered condition, I should dread the result. But by the present 20th we shall be concentrated and ready. D.

The reading of these dispatches produced an impression on the court very unfavorable to the prisoner. She had held the very life of the army in her hands. Had she got through the lines with these two ciphers and their interpretations she would have supplied the enemy with such information as would put an end to all uncertainty and insure an attack on the Army of the Cumberland before it could be concentrated or supported by other troops. This would have resulted in its annihilation.

There was really no defense to make, and the defending counsel simply placed his client on the mercy of the court, hoping that, being a woman, death might not be the penalty. The room was cleared and the verdict considered. The court were not long in convicting the accused of being a spy and amenable to the treatment of spies, but as to the punishment there was a great diversity of opinion. Some thought that imprisonment in a northern penitentiary would be a sufficient atonement. There were those who argued that this would not have any effect to deter others from similar acts at a time when the army was in so critical a situation. Then the importance of the dispatches Miss Baggs was attempting to deliver to the enemy, the fact that their delivery would have given any general prompt to take advantage of an army's weakness an opportunity to destroy the Army of the Cumberland, acted seriously upon those who were disposed toward clemency. Some members of the court argued that the prisoner had acted as a man and must take the consequences the same as if she were a man. There was none but knew that in this view of the case she would be immediately hanged. The disputants soon ranged themselves on opposite sides, the one in favor of an extreme course, the other of a life imprisonment. But the critical position of the army and the enormity of the offense finally won over the latter, and the case was compromised by the convicted woman being sentenced to be shot at sunrise the next morning. The verdict and sentence were approved within two hours of the finding, and Colonel Mark Maynard was ordered to see that the sentence was duly carried out.



Ratigan addresses the court.

He has been offered the postoffice at Tabor if he would consent to be a Democrat, but he says he draws the line on that—had rather wait a little while till the Republican party comes in power and then go in with a clear conscience. Says Tabor will give a majority for the Republican ticket next time.

Teal Sr., on Tuesday afternoon and were having a lively set-to when Chief Gonyea came along and ran them both in. Later in the afternoon they were taken before Esq. Holt and Teal plead guilty to disorderly conduct, was fined $5 and costs, $8 in all, and released. Wallace did not plead guilty, so he was required to put up bonds in the sum of $50 for appearance on Wednesday morning, at which time it appearing clear to the mind of the justice that Wallace was simply trying to defend himself from an assault he was discharged.

Personal Expenses In Vienna.

A singular diarist recently died at Vienna. His diary is an account book of his personal expenses from the age of 17 to 70. During this period it appears he smoked 628,713 cigars. Of these 43,639 were gifts. The rest cost him £2,500. He wore 85 pairs of trousers and 74 coats and waistcoats, and his total tailor's bill was close upon £1,600. His hosier's bill showed 62 pairs of very expensive socks, costing about 15 shillings per pair; 208 shirts and "fronts," and 306 collars, all of which must have been cheap at £60. Locomotion in omnibuses and trams absorbed £85 10s. The drink bill, which extends over 15 years only, comprises 28,786 bocks, of which 21,261 are differentiated as half bocks. He topped up with 36,081 nips of various sorts, and all this cost £1,028, plus tips, £260. The bars must have missed him anyhow when he left them at last, aged 73.—Pall Mall Gazette.

A Long Life.

Sir Benjamin Richardson, M. D., of England, thinks that the normal period of human life is about 110 years, and that seven out of ten average people could live that long if they lived in the right way. They should cultivate a spirit of serene cheerfulness under all circumstances and should learn to like physical exercise in a scientific way. No man, he says, need be particularly abstemious in regard to any article of food, for the secret of long life does not lie there. A happy disposition, plenty of sleep, a temperate gratification of all the natural appetites, and the right kind of physical exercises, will insure longevity to most people.—New York Tribune.

A "GREAT Democratic victory" is what they would call it if the citizens ticket should win next Tuesday.

THAT is indeed a funny kind of ticket that up here they call a "citizens ticket" but when they telegraph the news abroad they call it a "Democratic ticket?"

THE Republican party is the only party that goes into the field pledged to a definite line of action for the benefit of the city. Read the platform elsewhere in this issue.

As usual the Democratic party is raising the cry of "scheme" "jobbery" etc., against the Republican party. This is nothing new. They have always done it. It is there chief stock in trade.

SOME of our Republican friends who are kicking because the party put a ticket in the field "so late" forget the fact that it was the first ticket regularly placed in the field. The so-called "citizens ticket" representing nobody had to go into the field on petition and that was done on Saturday after the Republican ticket was in the field.

IT is natural enough for the Times to support the citizens ticket because the Times is Democratic anyhow but it looks wholly out of place for a paper that calls itself Republican to be continually jumping upon and abusing the Republican party for putting a Republican ticket in the field. The excuse that "it didn't know that it was loaded, is decidedly thin.

THE Republican city ticket is composed of men who are worthy and well qualified for the positions for which they have been placed in nomination and if the ticket is elected, of which there is no good reason to doubt, the affairs of the city will be as economically and well administered as it is possible to be. Mr. Brown and Mr. Sawyer are large property holders, are shrewed and competent business men than whom none better can be found in the city.

THE claim that the Republican party is not regularly in the field is all moonshine and made for the sole purpose of influencing weak minded Republicans to vote for the Democratic ticket under the excuse that the call was not properly made. Well, even if it had not been, and even if the central committee had neglsted to attend to the duties they were placed in office to attend to, that need not disfranchise the Republican party or force it to vote the Democratic ticket or nothing. The masses had a right to organize and place a Republican ticket in the field if they chose to do so, but it happens in this case that a majority of the Republican city central committee united in a call, the Republican ward committees all joining in it. This claim, however, is made by mugwumps and Democrats, and should fool nobody.

IT is amusing to see the Tribune attempt to excuse the action of that old Republican war horse, M. R. Brown, for presuming to accept a nomination on the Republican ticket saying that he "doubtless did not know what he was about," that "he was sick or had been away somewhere" and got back too fresh to know that there was such a thing as a Republican ticket in the city of Crookston. Just as if Mr. Brown did not work harder than any other man one year ago to convince Republicans that this was the only true way to place a ticket in the field! Among true-blue Republicans Mr. Brown does not need any such an apologist as that. The Tribune evidently feels ashamed of Mr. Brown for not endorsing the Democratic ticket in the guise of citizen's ticket, and while undoubtedly Mr. Brown is as grateful as the occasion demands, the Trib need not waste any sympathy on Mr. Brown's "unfortunate position."

THE idea that placing tickets in the field on a basis of party lines precludes independent voting is absurd on the face of it, for had that method been observed this spring the result would have been three tickets—composed of the very best men to be found in the three parties, thus affording a wider range of choice than now; even, for the independent voters to choose from. When the entire responsibility of the city government is placed upon a party that party is going to make as great an effort as possible to make the very best kind of a record in the interest of the people. But when you have a sort of a catch-as-catch-can, go-as-you-please method no party is responsible, nobody is responsible and if there happens to be any schemers in the city ever on the alert for opportunities this is their opportunity. With only one ticket in the field, as the "citizens" had planned for the few who generally appear at the caucuses would have elected the officers for the whole people as the only use for an election then would be simply to ratify the caucus ticket. That certainly does not show a sufficient interest in the best welfare of the city. Far better would it be to have three tickets in the field but in that case the experienced schemer could not get in his work to good advantage. That kind of an individual ALWAYS opposes drawing party lines.

THE Tribune tries to extract solace from the remark that "the Republicans endorsed the most of the citizens ticket," which is not a fair presentment of the case besides lacking the element of truth, as the Trib well knows. A number of the gentlemen nominated by the Republican party are, it is true serving the city in various capacities, but they were elected last year by the Republican party and having discharged their duties well and faithfully, were entitled to and received a re-nomination at the hands of the Republican party. That the citizens party recognized their merits and placed them upon its ticket is a compliment not only to Republican officials but to the Republican party that selected them and placed them in official position. The Republican party last year took the field agreeing that a basis of party lines was the best way to subserve the best interests of the city and the other new parties agreed with them later on and placed their tickets in the field also. The fact, now that the citizens party endorsed two-thirds of that ticket speaks volumes for the wisdom of the action of the Republican party in going into the field in that way as well as the character of its candidates for office. The Tribune hopes to recover from the effects of its bad blunder by throwing mud at the Republicans who support party ticket evidently.

Spring Tailor Jackets and Gowns For Ladies.

For spring wear, the Norfolk jacket will again be the favorite, being used as a distinct garment, or as a component of tailor costumes. In these jackets, the three box pleats, to conform with the present taste, are made, both back and front, to fall below the belt in a full short skirt style, thus producing the flaring effect which is so much sought after. When they are made up from cloth for wear with various gowns, silk is generally used for the belt. It is asserted that sleeves will be as large as ever, if not larger. As for skirts they are more and more flaring at the bottom, showing the gradual widening from the hips to the foot. From London the new tailor gowns for spring have double-breasted blouse-waists without fullness at the neck, but very much gathered all around at the waist. Light tweeds and cloths are very popular for all kinds of spring costumes, including bicycle suits. The McDowell Fashion Journals at hand contain many novelties of the season and moreover in order to furnish further assistance to their readers they offer special patterns of the latest and most practical styles. These patterns may be secured by means of coupons at exceedingly moderate prices, and for the accommodation of the public they are reproduced in catalogue form. This catalogue may be secured by applying directly to Messrs. A. McDowell & Co., 4 W. 14th St., N. Y., enclosing 25cts. "La Mode de Paris" and "Paris Album of Fashions" are the leading fashion magazines. They cost $3.50 each for a year's subscription, or 35 cents per copy. "The French Dressmaker" is always the great favorite among professional as well as amateur dressmakers. It costs $3.00 per annum, or 30 cts. a copy. "La Mode," a magazine of unsurpassed popularity, is only $1.50 a year, or 15 cents a copy. If you are unable to procure either of these journals from your newsdealer do not take any substitute from him, but apply by mail directly to Messrs. McDowell & Co., 4 West 14th Street, New York.

SMUT IN MHEAT.

lodge all of them from the seed grains by throughly cleaning the wheat. Some method of destroying them by heat or by the use of fungicides is necessary. During the past year we made experiments in the laboratory and in the field with fungicides and with heating the kernels both in hot water and in hot air. A thorough review has been made of the report of experiments conducted at experiment stations in this country and in Canada and a number of reports have been received from farmers who have tried the remedy we advised a year ago and also other remedies. The blue stoning remedies and hot-water treatment contain the essential principles used by all those who have successfully treated wheat for smut. So far as we have learned, no one questions the effectiveness of the remedies or the profit of treating seed wheat. The blue stone sprinkling method is the handiest and cheapest of all and is nearly as good as any. The blue stone dipping method is an old and tried remedy, kills the smut and is only slightly more expensive than the sprinkling method. Blue stone has a slightly injurious effect in retarding the germination of the grain, and the dipping method, as ordinarily carried out by farmers, has a worse effect than the sprinkling method. The hot-water treatment is the best in effect on the quality of the seeds and crop, and it destroys the smut, but under ordinary farm conditions it is somewhat difficult to carry out, as the wheat must be carefully dried, a rather difficult task in our cold spring weather.

Statements of all three methods are given below and farmers are urged to use that one which seems to them best suited to their conditions. It will pay every farmer to treat his wheat if there is any smut in the neighborhood the threshing machine will carry enough to each farmer to make treating the seed an annual necessity.

THE BLUE-STONE SPRINKLING METHOD.

The blue-stone sprinkling method is the simplest and cheapest remedy we have tried. It is very effective and only slightly harmful to the seeds of wheat. Our own experience the past season, the experience of numerous farmers who have reported successful trials of this plan, and especially the strong words of commendation from Messrs. McKay and Bedford, superintendents of the Manitoba and Assiniboia Experiment farms, and from the farmers of those provinces where this plan has been generally adopted, all give us faith to recommend this method.

REMEDY.

Dissolve one pound of blue stone (copper sulphate) in three gallons of water. Spread out ten bushels of wheat on a tight floor in barn or house or in a tight wagon-box and sprinkle on the solution. With scoop-shovel turn the grain several times during the sprinkling till every kernel is thoroughly wetted. The solution needs to penetrate the crease in the grain. In case of badly infested seed wheat it should be first throughly cleaned, using a strong blast to remove all grains of bunt and the three gallons of the solution should be applied to only seven bushels of wheat instead of ten. In three hours the wheat will be ready for the seeder and as the blue stone somewhat injures the seed it should not be prepared long before it is sown. A good plan is to prepare in the evening the seed to be used the next day. As the seed is somewhat swollen a few quarts more per acre should be sown than of dry wheat. The blue stone solution can be made by the barrel, using care to get the right proportions of blue stone and water, and then it can be measured out one ten quart pailful to seven or eight bushels of wheat. The wheat should be turned four or five times within an hour after sprinkling. If a water-tight floor is not available the solution should be sprinkled on so slowly that none runs through.

THE BLUE-STONE DIPPING METHOD.

We have many reports from parties who have successfully treated smutty wheat by immersing it in solution of blue stone. The effect is practically the same as with the sprinkling method. However, the grain is wetted and must be dried with care before it can be put in the seeder. This can be done by spreading thinly on the barn floor and shoveling over a few or several times daily until dry, or it can be accomplished by sprinkling land plaster or lime over the wet grain. Some have thought that the land plaster or lime has a beneficial effect, but experiments by other experiment stations fail to show that these substances have much value other than to dry the grain. By earlier absorbing the solution they may slightly lessen the evil effects the blue stone has on the germinating qualities of the grain. The following statement of this remedy contains the essential direction:

REMEDY.

Fill a barrel two-thirds full of a solution of one-half pound of blue stone (sulphate of copper) to one gallon of water. Partially fill gunny sacks with wheat and immerse in the solution for five or ten minutes, moving the sacks up and down and shaking or kneading it so that every kernel is throughly wetted. Arrange a drip shelf on which to set the sacks of wet wheat that the solution draining out may run back into the barrel or hang them on hooks and catch the drip in pails. When the water ceases dripping out of the bags pour the wheat on the barn floor and shovel a few times daily till dry enough to store without danger of heating. The drying may be facilitated by mixing plaster or slacked lime with the wet wheat. It is necessary to renew the quantity of the solution, and for this purpose the prepared solution may be kept ready in other barrels.

THE HOT-WATER METHOD.

Professor Jenson of Denmark discovered that smutty wheat immersed in water heated to 130 to 135 degrees F. is not injured for seed, but that this temperature kills the germs of stinking smut. A higher temperature harms the wheat and a lower temperature will not kill all the smut spores. This treatment causes the wheat to germinate sooner than wheat not so treated, while the blue-stone methods, especially the dipping method, retard germination. In fact the hot-water treatment seems to have a decided, though small, advantage in increasing the yield of the crop. This is doubtless the best of the three methods where the farmer has facilities to perfectly carry it out. But on most Northwestern farms it is very difficult to dry the treated wheat, and few have thermometers which are accurate enough to be relied upon at the temperature named. By this method if the drying is rapidly and throughly done, the seed may be prepared some days or weeks before the time of sowing.

REMEDY.

Fill two barrels or wash-tubs two-thirds full of water. Keep the water in No. 1 at 120 to 120 degrees and No. 2 at 130 to 135 degrees. Fill gunny sacks, or bags of other open-meshed material, partly full of wheat; immerse in No. 1 till the wheat is warmed up so as to not cool the water in No. 2; drain the bag a few seconds and then immerse in No. 2 for five minutes, raising and lowering the bag or kneading the wheat, so that the water throughly penetrates to and heats every kernel. Spread out at once and shovel over until dry. It is a good plan to dip the bag of wheat in cool water, so as at once to cool the wheat. Care must be taken to add hot water so as to keep the water in No. 2 at 130 to 135 degrees; 133 degrees F. is the temperature preferred.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

From our Regular Correspondent.

WASHINGTON, March 22, 1895.

Mr. Cleveland and Secretary Gresham ought to blush for shame every time they think of demanding the recall of Mr. Thurston, the Hawaiian minister. It is but another added to the long list of unmanly acts with which Hawaii has been dealt by this administration. It is simply childish for Secretary Gresham to pretend that the recall was asked for because Minister Thurston gave information to the newspapers about Hawaiian matters before he gave it to the Department of State. That is merely an excuse. Thurston's real offence has been that he was always wide awake to prevent any misrepresentation of Hawaiian affairs being accepted by the American people, and was consequently constantly opposed to the administration and its policy. Secretary Gresham does not consider giving diplomatic advance information to the newspapers any crime when it can be made to serve his own purpose. It has been scarcely a week since he gave the newspapers his dispatch to Minister Taylor, demanding an apology from Spain for those shots from a Spanish gunboat at a U. S. mail steamer, before it had been called to Spain. He not only gave out the dispatch but he compelled those who used it to do so under a Madrid date line, so as to leave the impression that it was given out in Madrid and not in Washington—a senseless bit of deception which was at once discovered and exposed.

It will be remembered that Mr. Cleveland promised congress, in a special message, that he would keep it advised concerning our relations with Hawaii. Yet in the face of that promise a communication asking that Minister Thurston be recalled was sent to the Hawaiian government on Feb. 21, eleven days before the adjournment of congress and not a word was said to congress about it. It is not surprising that Senator Frye should say: "It looks to me like a very small piece of business."

They are telling a story in Washington at the expense of ex-Congressman Bryan, of Nebraska, that hits off Mr. Bryan's ruling trait good enough to be true, if it isn't. According to the story a book agent induced Mr. Bryan to buy a copy of the Century Cyclopœdia of Names, by telling him that the book contained the name and biography of every man, living or dead, who ever made a marked impression upon the affairs of the world. A few days after the book was delivered Bryant sent for the book agent and said to him: "You sold me that book under false pretenses." "I beg pardon, you are mistaken," replied the suave book agent. Mr. Bryan began to lose his temper and snapped out: "Didn't you tell me that the book contained the name and biography of every man, living and dead, who has made an impression upon the world's affairs?" "Yes, sir, and it does." "It does nothing of the sort; my name isn't in it." "Why should it be?" retorted the book agent.

Although the senate rejected the nomination of Alfred D. Tinsley to be postmaster at Sioux Falls, South Dakota, the home of Senator Pettigrew, by more than a three-quarter vote—42 to 13—Mr. Cleveland this week signed Tinsley's commission as postmaster. Evidently Mr. Cleveland likes to be jumped on by the Senate, and he will certainly again get jumped on about this appointment, when congress meets again.

Sibley and the new silver party are already reported to be on the verge of divorce. Sibley is rich, but he is also shrewd—that's one reason why he is rich—and those who had an idea that they would be allowed to have the run of the Sibley money bags in return for having suggested him as a presidential candidate, have already discovered how badly mistaken they were. In other words, Mr. Sibley declines to put up money for moonshine, and in consequence the promoters of the silver party no longer even pretend to believe that Sibley is a great man who only needs his statesmanship developed. Even the Populists have refused to join the silver party. This isn't a one-idea country. There never has been and there never will be, a successful political party which confines itself to a single idea. That a majority—a very large majority—of the people of this country believes in bi-metallism is certain, but that they will sink all their other beliefs and ever be merged into one political party isn't probable. Let no man make the mistake of supposing that silver is going to be the deciding factor in next year's presidential campaign, or that any third party is going to cut any considerable figures in the campaign. The fight is going to be between the Republican and Democratic parties, and it is reasonably certain that the Republican platform will declare for bi-metallism, and probable that the Democratic platform will do the same, or straddle the question, notwithstanding the scheming now going on to renominate Mr. Cleveland on a gold basis platform.

Blood Poison
THE BANE OF HUMAN LIFE,
Driven Out of the System by the Use of
Ayer's Sarsaparilla

"For five years, I was a great sufferer from a most persistent blood disease, none of the various medicines I took being of any help whatever. Hoping that change of climate would benefit me, I went to Cuba, to Florida, and then to Saratoga Springs, where I remained some time drinking the waters. But all was no use. At last, being advised by several friends to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla, I began taking it, and very soon favorable results were manifest. To-day I consider myself a perfectly healthy man, with a good appetite and not the least trace of my former complaint. To all my friends, and especially young men like myself, I recommend Ayer's Sarsaparilla, if in need of a perfectly reliable blood-purifier." — JOSE A. Nothwithstanding the opposition of Democrats and a few disgruntled mugwumps there is no reason why republicans should not support the regular Republican ticket at the polls next Tuesday.

The Crookston Grocery Co. has what you might call a general delivery team—anyway they did have on Friday, when the team took a lively go-as-you-please, scattering groceries promiscuously.

O. O. Christianson, the Republican candidate for treasurer has acceptably filled that office one term which is a good guaranty for what he can do. He deserves re-election and will no doubt get his deserts this time.

Louis Rivard and another man had a narrow escape from drowning on Thursday last. While driving on the ice they broke through into the river. Fortunatly, however, managing to escape with only a thorough ducking.

The Republican candidate for city clerk, having filled that office acceptably for one term needs no introduction to Crookston people. He is a dyed in the wool republican and a competent man. Vote for W. A. Lanctot.

Democrats, and a few disgruntled mugwumps are trying their best to ridicule the regular Republican city ticket in hopes of defeating it. If the republican principles of equal rights to all men are not worth fighting for then nothing is.

At the Republican caucus held on Wednesday evening A. G. Anderson was nominated for alderman. In the second ward E. C. Davis; in the third ward Wm. Watts; in the fourth ward C. W. Motz. The fifth ward failed to hold a caucus.

The funeral of the little Sather girl took place at the house on Sunday, attended by a large concourse of sympathizing friends and neighbors. The remains were laid to rest in the cemetery on Nels Johnson's place a a few miles west of the city.

"That's what you might call a land office business, 15 homestead entries to-day," said Pat Russell to our reporter as he looked into the U. S. land office for news on Thursday afternoon of last week. This does begin to look like business, surely.

The base of Ayer's Hair Vigor is a refined and delicate fluid, which does not soil or become rancid by exposure to the air, and which is as perfect a substitute for the oil supplied by nature in youth and health, as modern chemistry can produce.

Look over the Republican city ticket and you will see that it is composed of men well worthy of your suffrage, composed of solid business men of our city. The election of that ticket assures a wise and economical administration of the affairs of our city.

"Success is the reward of merit" not of assumption. Popular appreciation is what tells in the long run. For fifty years, people have been using Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and to-day it is the blood-purifier most in favor with the public. Ayer's Sarsaparilla cures.

President J. J. Hill, of the Great Northern road sees reason to anticipate the return of good times soon. Among other reasons he says that the sale of land by the land department of the road has more than doubled and the inquiries for land grow more every day.

If a man has got an underhanded scheme to work upon the people it is always customary for him to kick up as big a dust as he can and pretend that the other fellow is raising the row. Hence, it is that there is so much talk about irregularity in the Republican camp.

The Times' gratuitous slur upon Mr. Childs in its issue of Saturday is worthy the source from which it emanates. The Times don't like to have Mr. Childs in the council because it cannot control his actions there and hence its display of spleen. However Mr. Childs will come pretty near fooling the Times this time.

Some sneak thief broke into the granary of Tollif Hoveland one night last week and stole a load of oats. The being who could steal from a Polk county farmer in these times is so lost to all feelings of common humanity that he ought to be placed in solitary confinement in state prison for the balance of his natural life.

The Republican nominee for alderman in the second ward needs no introduction to Crookston people. He was among the first to come to this city, arriving before the first railroad and has always been identified with its best interests. Mr. Davis will be elected and will be one of the best officials in that body.

A bit of a blaze in the Odd-Fellows block on Friday night might have caused some trouble if A. R. Holston had not happened along just in time. A pile of papers had taken fire and was getting into working order when A. R. chanced to come along and give it one sharp glance with his eagle eye and the fire expired immediately.

C. W. Motz, the candidate for alderman in the 4th ward is one of the prominent business men of our city whose large property interests here are a sufficient guaranty of his faithfulness, should he be elected. He is a man who has had experience in such matters a successful business man and the 4th ward could do no better than to elect him.

H. O. Newman, who resides near Green Bay, Wis., brought a carload of horses on Thursday, of last week and they were at Lancaster's stables until Monday, when Mr. Newman took them to Grand Forks to see if the demand is better there. On Sunday while the horses were exercising in the yard one of them slipped and fell in such a way as to break a leg, and had to be killed.

John McLean, one of the Republican candidates for justice of the peace was one of the first settlers of Crookston, and did very much to get the city and county started. He was for a time county attorney and was always alive to the best interests of this community. Being a lawyer he will be thus better enabled to act in the capacity of justice of the peace and he will no doubt be elected by a good majority.

Charlie Misner: "Items, did you say? Well, I haven't got anything to-day that I am at liberty to give away but I may have a little one for you soon, as there is a lot of furniture ordered to go into the block, which looks as though one of Crookston's most prominent young business men would begin to trot in double harness pretty quick——but I am not going to give it away——not just yet awhile.

The statement having been made that the call for the Republican city convention was unauthorized by the city central committee, we have investigated and find that the call was authorized by Hugh Robertson, Felix Fournet, John Munroe, C. O. Christianson and Fred Anderson. Looking over the JOURNAL file for last year we find that the following named gentleman composed the city central committee:

At large—Hugh Robertson, chairman, Felix Fournet.
First Ward—Fred Anderson.
Second Ward—John Munroe.
Third Ward—S. L. Collins.
Fourth Ward—C. O. Christianson.
Fifth Ward—E. D. Childs.

Thus it will be seen that a large majority of the Republican central committee authorized the call, and if that is not authority, what is?

Among those who early became identified with the city of Crookston was Capt. M. R. Brown, the Republican nominee for mayor, who has ever since his arrival at Crookston been a thorough and persistent advocate of every enterprise that would tend to enhance our material interests and prosperity. He is well known as a careful, painstaking business man, who knows when and how to economize and we venture the assertion without fear of contradiction, that no better selection for the city's interests could have been made at this time. Fortunate, indeed, is the city to have such a man willing to make the sacrifice for the good of the public that the office demands at this time. If elected, and there is no good reason why he should not be, he will be one of the best mayors the city ever had.

Henry Rodman came down from Lindsay on Wednesday of last week to straighten out an error by which foreclosure proceedings had been commenced against his land. He was successful and went home happy because his farm is one of the choicest in the country. In speaking to old man Andrews about it Rodman said: "Even if the times are a bit hard just now, that farm means my living and as poor as I feel just now I would not take $2,000 for it. It has one of the finest lakes in the state on part of it, full of fish; there is wood enough on it to last my life-time and more too, and I have plenty of land upon which to raise crops. I know of no place where I could better myself on a place in this county. A man who has as good a place as I have is all right and need not suffer.

Mrs. O. S. Johnson died suddenly at the family residence in the town of Russia on Wednesday at 10 o'clock A. M., of neuralgia of the heart. She was first attacked with severe pains in the region of the heart on Sunday but was relieved shortly the attack returning with more violence Tuesday night resulting in death. She was born in Winnesheik county, Wisconsin on April 18th 1855 and lived there until she was married to Mr. Johnson on Jan. 29th 1881, when she came with her husband to this county, where she has since lived. Four children were born to them who with the husband are left to mourn the loss of their best friend on earth. The funeral took place on Saturday and the remains were laid to rest in the burial ground in the town of Russia.

The Times on Friday wisely remarked: "The calling of a Republican convention at this time is a mistake that cannot help but result disastrously," etc., etc. We fail to see wherein the presence of two tickets in the field will result disastrously to the best interests of the city. Because the Times was satisfied with the ticket already in the field it does not follow that every voter in the city was. The arguments that the city papers used one year ago this spring in favor of going into the field on a basis of party lines are just as sound now as then. The Republican party inaugurated that line of action at that time, appointed a committee and went to work on that line; the other parties followed suit and agreed that it was the proper thing to do, and if it was then, it is no less so now, and this feeling animated so many of the rank and file of the Republican party, who were desirous of following the old flag that the committee saw that there was only one way to satisfy these Republicans and this was to call the caucuses and the convention. This was done, five members of the seven who comprised the committee taking action in the matter; and the Times calls this "a mistake." Talks as though it was something akin to a crime for the Republicans to put a ticket in the field! But the Times is not on that side of the political fence, anyhow, and perhaps this is why it looks criminal.

Tuesday morning dawned bright and pleasant. The wind had gone down and the weather was warm and spring-like.

J. F. Hawkins, the Republican candidate for assessor is a man thoroughly competent to discharge the duties of the office to which he will no doubt be elected.

T. A. Harris went down to Fertile on Saturday to look after some jobs.

A. Kaiser came in on the Fosston train Saturday and left for St. Paul the same evening.

T. A. Harris has commenced moving the Archimbault building to its new site on north Main street.

O. H. Richardson expected to get to seeding wheat on Monday. Got his dragging well along last week.

August George received the sad news of the death of his aged mother in Germany. She was about 85 years old.

Miss. E. Veronneau has rented the room in the Ricket block formerly occupied by Charlie Vine which is being fitted up for her occupancy and will be ready about April 1st.

Col. Cobham Post held an extra session on Tuesday evening to take action on the bill providing that the tax levied for the support of indigent soldiers, be left in the counties where it is raised. The concensus of opinion was that it would be a good thing if properly handled, which the bill under consideration does not seem to provide for.

Chris Houston: "This kind of weather fools me. I could go to seeding right away, but I do not know as I dare do it, lest this fine weather be succeeded by a freeze-up and spoil what grain I should get in. In all my experience here I never saw such a spring as this. I am figuring on sowing 50 acres of flax, 200 of wheat, 75 to 80 to barley and 40 acres to oats. I guess that is about the proper proportion for this year."

Mrs. Wm. Campian, of Angus, came down on Monday evening on her way to the experiment farm at St. Anthony, where her son Alfred, who has been there attending school for four years, graduates on Friday. She will spend the intervening time visiting friends at Hudson, Wis., where on Thursday she expected to meet her daughter Elsie, who has been visiting in Indian Territory, Nebraska and Kansas, and who will return home with the party next week.

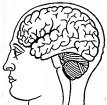
T. B. McManus: "I want to say to you that Captain Roberts, of Detroit, is one of the best hotel men I ever knew. The last time I put up at his hotel I left a call for an early train and in some way it was neglected and I missed my train. When I called for my bill, Mr. Roberts said: 'You have no bill at this hotel; when we neglect our duties, as we did in your case, we never charge our guests for it.' I told him it was not so very essential in my case, but that made no difference. He would take no pay."

On Monday night a man considerably under the influence of the ardent stepped into Chris Hoch's place in the Ricket block and called for one more drink. Chris, seeing that the man was loaded plenty already declined to give him any more, whereat the stranger became abusive and proceeded to raise a row, and Chris told him he would "come off the perch" or take a walk. As he kept on with his demonstration Chris led him to the door when the fellow gave Chris a clip in the eye that roused the whole dutch nation in him, and he returned the compliment with interest breaking his right hand. The man went out, returning in a short time and recommencing the chin music, he was again put out and went with officer Kyle to the lock-up. Chris wears his hand in a sling.

MYSTERIES!

The Nervous System the Seat of Life and Mind. Recent Wonderful Discoveries.

No mystery has ever compared with that of human life. It has been the leading subject of professional research and study in all ages. But notwithstanding this fact it is not generally known that the seat of life is located in the upper part of the spinal cord, near the base of the brain, and so sensitive is this portion of the nervous system that even the prick of a needle will cause instant death.



Recent discoveries have demonstrated that all the organs of the body are under the control of the nerve centers, located in or near the base of the brain, and that when these are deranged the organs which they supply with nerve fluid are also deranged. When it is remembered that a serious injury to the spinal cord will cause paralysis of the body below the injured point, because the nerve force is prevented by the injury from reaching the paralyzed portion, it will be understood how the derangement of the nerve centers will cause the derangement of the various organs which they supply with nerve force.

Two-thirds of chronic diseases are due to the imperfect action of the nerve centers at the base of the brain, not from a derangement primarily originating in the organ itself. The great mistake of physicians in treating these diseases is that they treat the organ rather than the nerve centers which are the cause of the trouble.

DR. FRANKLIN MILES, the celebrated specialist, has profoundly studied this subject for over 20 years, and has made many important discoveries in connection with it, chief among them being the facts contained in the above statement, and that the ordinary methods of treatment are wrong. All headache, dizziness, dullness, confusion, pressure, blues, mania, melancholy, insanity, epilepsy, St. Vitus dance, etc., are nervous diseases no matter how caused. The wonderful success of Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine is due to the fact that it is based on the foregoing principle.

DR. MILES' RESTORATIVE NERVINE is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or sent direct by DR. MILES MEDICAL CO., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid. It contains neither opiates nor dangerous drugs.

BLOOMERS ARE BARRED.

Canadian Morality Shocked at a Lady Bicyclist's Costume.

VICTORIA, B. C., March 27.—The police have decided that bloomers are not suitable for ladies' street wear, even when worn as a bicycling costume, and have taken steps to enforce this decision. Miss Ethel Delmont is an enthusiastic wheel woman, pretty and graceful. Last week she made her appearance in the bloomer costume, and if Lady Godiva had herself essayed a repetition of her famous ride, the sensation could not have been greater. The town came forth to gaze, and for the moment the policemen were petrified with amazement. Then they aroused to action and Miss Ethel received an official visitor who informed her that a repetition of her appearance in the objectionable costume would mean a police court summons on the charge of creating a disturbance on a public street. Miss Delmont's bloomers are discarded.

BUSY IN SHIPYARDS.

Vessels Under Construction for the Lake Trade.

WEST SUPERIOR, Wis., March 27.—There is a decided air of activity at the shipyard of the American Steel Barge company in this city at the present time. Reed Will Make No Speeches.

PORTLAND, Me., March 27.—Hon. Thomas B. Reed stated to an Associated Press reporter that he declined the invitation to speak before the convention of college Republican clubs at Grand Rapids, Mich., on April 6, and that he will make no speeches this spring. Unless an extra session of congress calls him to Washington he will remain in Portland until the summer, when he will sail for Europe with his family.

Shipped Direct to the Mint.

HILL CITY, S. D., March 27.—About 500 pounds of the Holy Terror rock, taken out Saturday, was so rich in gold that it was shipped direct to the mint from the Adams express office here. Parties who handled the ore say that one bucketful was more gold than rock and that it would yield $10,000.

Reports Exaggerated.

CINCINNATI, March 27.—Exaggerated reports of an alleged tornado, sweeping over Ohio, have been sent out. The wind made the streets unendurable here, but the damage was limited to signs here and sheds in the country.

Swept by Fire.

The first exclusively Swedish colony in the Northwest is now being established 62 miles west of Duluth on the Northern Pacific road. The details are just made public. The promoter of the idea is Colonel Rosin, a leader among the Swedish people at Duluth. He has purchased a large tract of land at $2 per acre, only one-third of the purchase price being paid down, and will locate a town there. Already about 60 families have gone into the enterprise, and all are sanguine of building up a second Stockholm.

BURROWED IN HAY.

A Southern Minnesota Man Unconscious for Four Days.

SLEEPY EYE, Minn., March 25.—George Dillman, grain buyer at Cobden for the Eagle Mill company of New Ulm, whose disappearance last Wednesday evening has been the cause of several searching parties being sent out, but all without avail, was found in a semi-conscious condition under the hay in his own barn, having lain in a stupor for three days and four nights. Mr. Hanks of Tracy, his brother-in-law, was feeding the horses, and in tramping on the hay seemed to partially arouse Mr. Dillman, who tried to arise and thus made his presence known. He was taken to the house, a doctor summoned and restoratives applied. After consciousness was restored Mr. Dillman, though very weak from his long fast, was able to talk a little. The last thing he remembers was that while feeding the horses Wednesday evening a benumbing paralytic feeling came over him and he threw himself on the hay, believing it would soon pass off, and evidently burrowed in the hay unconsciously.

My Wife is Nervous

Says many a man and too often he is inclined to blame the poor, tired woman who cannot eat or sleep, whose whole life is filled with misery because her blood has become impoverished and her nervous system exhausted. She needs a building up medicine like Hood's Sarsaparilla. A few bottles will enrich and vitalize her blood, tone and strengthen her digestive organs, give her a good appetite, enable her to sleep soundly, banish her nervousness and bring back her smiles. Mr. J. W. Roberson, of Greenfield, Tenn., says: "My wife began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla about three months ago and she is now taking her third bottle. She has been in poor health for fifteen years. Hood's Sarsaparilla is doing her more good than any other medicine she has ever taken. Her appetite is better, she looks better and there has been improvement in every way."

DO YOU Want to be cured by the great specialist? Dr. A. L. Cole, so well and favorably known throughout the Northwest by his long residence and successful practice in this city, continues to cure all Nervous Chronic and Private diseases of both sexes. His name is a sufficient guarantee of prompt and perfect cure of every case he undertakes.

Young men suffering from the effects of indiscretion, who are weak in mind and body, despondent, wanting in confidence and incapable of fulfilling their mission in life and who realize their impending doom, should act at once and consult this successful specialist.

Married men and those contemplating matrimony who find themselves incapable of or who fear least they cannot fulfill the duties expected of them, can be restored to perfect health, mental and physical.

Hidden losses—In many cases the loss occurs unobserved by the sufferer. To this hidden drain upon the nervous system may be attributed the cause of many diseases of the nerves, stomach, heart, kidneys and bladder. Thus we can account for a large proportion of all cases of epilepsy, palsey, paralysis, apoplexy, softening of the brain, insanity, loss of nervous and muscular power and similar affections.

STATE LEGISLATURE

TWENTY-NINTH BIENNIAL SESSION

Tuesday, March 19.

SENATE—The senate put in all day Tuesday upon the charter bill, but has not yet finished the revision, although they have gone through it once.

H. F. 673 passed under a suspension of the rules. It provides that any township composed of territory co-extensive and identical with the territory composing any village may be dissolved.

H. F. 387, to establish a normal school at Duluth, has been recommended to pass by the committee on normal school.

The committee on railroads has recommended indefinite postponement of four bills introduced to make horizontal cuts in freight rates.

HOUSE—At the morning session the house departed from its regular order and took up the calendar. Every bill read was passed without delay. The more important of the measures were as follows:

Proposing an amendment to sec. 13 of art. 1 of the constitution.

Relating to the assessment and collection of taxes.

To provide for the use of stone in the construction of public buildings, for which funds shall be appropriated by the state of Minnesota, said stone shall be quarried, cut and dressed within the state.

Relating to the Itasca state park.

Specifying the time and place when and where game and fish may be killed or caught.

Wednesday, March 20.

SENATE—The Howard charter bill passed the senate with many amendments. The Sheehan home rule bill has also been placed upon the calendar with a favorable recommendation. Very little other business was done.

HOUSE—The house adopted a resolution lengthening the hours holding sessions by making them from 9:30 a. m. until 12:30 p. m., and then from 2 o'clock in the afternoon until such time as an adjournment might be taken. Most of the day was spent considering general orders.

There was quite a fight on Mr. Craig's bill to establish two new experimental stations as adjuncts of the agricultural school, but it finally received favorable recommendation.

Thursday, March 21.

SENATE—The senate went half through the calendar during the morning. Two bills caused some debate. Senator Roverud's bill defining vagrancy and providing punishment therefor, and to authorize cities and incorporated villages to provide for the punishment of vagrants. The bill first passed and was afterwards reconsidered and defeated.

Feig's bill, establishing the office of state entomologist at the experimental station for the destruction of chinch bugs, passed unanimously, but it was not until some of the senators from the country made a stand and told of what benefit it would be to the farming country.

The Sheehan "home rule" bill for cities passed the senate. Both that and the Howard bill are now in the house, with chances in favor of the Sheehan bill.

The senate also passed the primary election bill.

HOUSE—On general orders in the house a favorable recommendation was given the bill by Messrs. Cant and Douglas to encourage the payment of taxes for the year 1893 and prior years on all land which had been or might be sold to the state—the certificates of which have not been assigned by the state—by abating all penalties and interest above 7 per cent if paid prior to Dec. 1, 1895.

Feig's bill relating to forfeiture of unearned railroad land grants was recommended to pass.

Friday, March 22.

SENATE—There was an interesting fight over the bills of the pine land investigating committee and the one framed at the instance of Auditor Dunn. And Auditor Dunn was "done" by a goodly majority.

There have been two pine land bills introduced in the house, one by Mr. Staples, backed by the committee, and the other by Mr. Gibbs. R. C. Dunn, the state auditor, being the author. On the Gibbs bill the committee on public lands, of which Mr. Staples is chairman, reported recommending indefinite postponement, and it was on this point that the issue was drawn. The bill was postponed and the Staples bill made a special order.

HOUSE—The house under special order, rejected the census committee's bill, and the census committee was instructed to frame another one which shall simply provide for enumeration.

Saturday, March 23.

SENATE—The senate after a debate of some length in committee of the whole, decided by a vote of 23 to 12 to recommend for passage the bill known as the age of consent bill. It raises the age of consent from 16 to 18 years.

Several other measures were recommended to pass, including those making national building and loan associations subject to usury laws and the taking of the census of 1895, and appropriating $50,000 therefor.

HOUSE—Thirteen bills on the calendar were passed. Among them was Senator Cronkbite's bill providing for a hard fiber twine plant in the state prison, and appropriating $10,000 in addition to the $15,000 available for that purpose.

Mr. Gibbs' bill, making Hon. John S. Pillsbury a life member of the board of regents of the state university, was also passed.

The Howard charter bill was made a special order for Thursday at 2 p. m.

Monday, March 25.

SENATE—The senate had long discussions upon three important bills Monday. One of these related to the forfeiture of the rights of the Hastings and Dakota Railway company, which passed. Another is Senator Miller's bill to declare express companies common carriers and to place them under supervision of the railway and warehouse commission. A new bill was introduced for the original one on this subject, which was lost, together with one bearing on the same matter that had been indefinitely postponed. A third bill is the one introduced by Senator Culkin to make a horizontal cut of 25 per cent in freight rates on roads of less than 60 miles. This bill was not disposed of and its discussion is to be resumed.

HOUSE—The house passed 15 bills besides introducing 11 prospective laws. Of the bills passed the Theden senate file seeks to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors to minors under any conditions. There were two grain bills, both house files, passed—Mr. Cant's bill to facilitate traffic in cereals, and Mr. Gibbs' measure, codifying and amending the country warehouse laws. The bill defeated was Mr. Johns' measure for the protection of human life from injury or destruction by fire.

GERMAN ARMY MARRIAGE.

Officers May Not Wed Without the Consent of Their Superiors.

No German officer can marry without the consent of his colonel, according to Poultney Bigelow in "The Borderland of Czar and Kaiser," and this consent can be obtained only after a careful inquiry into all the circumstances surrounding the proposed alliance. First, is the young lady suitable for association with the wives of the other officers? Second, will the bridegroom be able to live respectably and bring up his family? Third, are his means, or those of his wife, invested in proper securities, so that he is not liable to be expelled by reason of bankruptcy? The extraordinary social advantages enjoyed by the German officer and the pecuniary responsibility growing naturally from such advantages make his small pay, which amounts only to about $1 a day in case of a first lieutenant, appear even smaller than it is.

An American lady who had been spending a winter in Dresden told Mr. Bigelow that all the bachelors of the garrison were furnished with a list of marriageable women, each name ornamented with the property she might be expected to inherit. This no doubt was a mistake on her part, but it is a very common one. German officers stationed in desirable towns are very apt to get into debt and have to choose between leaving the army in disgrace or marrying a rich girl.

Mr. Bigelow adds: "From my own experience in Germany the officers would appear to have married for love and to be happy in consequence," and yet "the number of those who got into debt and fail to secure a rich wife is considerable, although it makes no particular ripple in the surface. Such men simply disappear and turn up sooner or later in America, where they take employment as coachmen, waiters, teachers or instructors in riding schools. The change of life is very violent and is adopted only as preferable to suicide."

TOWER HILL.

The Most Important Eminence and Most Notable Spot In All London.

Tower hill is perhaps both the most important eminence and the most notable spot in all the metropolis. Few of us, as we pass it on a steamer or cross it on our route to the Ankworkes Package, at the commencement of our autumnal holiday, think what great persons have quietly lived there, and what others, equally great, have wept and died upon it. To it, or rather to Great Tower street, came Rochester to parse his trade as an Italian fortune teller, while the bedizened Buckingham often walked thither in order to consult a conjurer, a shrewd, farseeing rogue, who, when Felton bought at the cutler's shop on the summit of the hill for a shilling the knife with which he killed the duke's father, may have known for what purpose it was required.

William Penn was born on this hill in a house close to London wall. Forty-four years later—that is, in A. D. 1685—a poet lay dead, choked by a crust which starvation had urged him to devour too greedily, in an upper room of the Bull tavern. This was the ill fated Otway. At the time when the son of the muses lay dead, Betterton, the celebrated founder of the stage after the restoration, was wringing tears from the eyes of the public, not for the famished dead, but at his own fictitious sorrows in "Venice Preserved."

It was in Great Tower street that Peter the Great used to pass his evenings drinking hot pepper and brandy with his boon companion, Lord Carmarthen. In the neighborhood of Little Tower street, which can scarcely be supposed to have been inspiring, Thomson composed his "Summer." In Grub street, the supposed lurking place of many a mute, inglorious Milton, much hack literary work was effected, none of which has survived the touch of time's destroying hand.—Gentleman's Magazine.

That Troublesome Meringue.

The secret of making the meringue for lemon pies so that it stands tall and thick is in the baking. Whip the whites of the eggs to a froth that will not fall out of the bowl when turned upside down. Put in about a tablespoonful of granulated sugar for each white, stir very little, spread it on the pies when they are just done and still baking hot without taking them out of the oven and let them bake with the oven open. If made hot enough to brown, the meringue will surely fall and become worse than nothing. Five to ten minutes is enough to bake the meringue dry and straw colored. Sift granulated sugar on the top of the meringue as soon as spread on the pie before baking.—Philadelphia Times.

Liable to Be Misunderstood.

Liable to misunderstanding are such interesting adornments of shop windows as, "Superior butter, 1 shilling per pound. Nobody can touch it"—probably not—or the tempting notice of the dealer in cheap shirts, "They won't last long at this price!" Worse still was the admonition which appeared in the window of a cheap restaurant, "Dine here, and you will never dine anywhere else." The viands of this restaurateur must have been almost as deadly and unerring in their effect as the whisky known in the western states as "forty rod," because that was the distance beyond which no drinker could walk after its imbibition.—Cornhill Magazine.

Up With the Times.

Old Hen—No more domestic drudgery for me! I'd have you know that I'm an emancipated hen, I am.

Old Rooster—You still lay eggs.

Old Hen—Yes, but they are hatched in an incubator.—New York Weekly.

Self Convicted.

Old Offender—W'at yer arrestin me fer? I hain't done nothin fer a year.

Officer—That's the time ye hit it right. The charge is going to be vagrancy.—Kate Field's Washington.

Sensational Report of Whisky Trust Investigation Experts.

CHICAGO, March 26.—A most sensational report was submitted to Receiver McNulta of the whisky trust by the experts who for a month have been examining the books of the Greenhut management of the concern. Charges of juggling accounts, doctoring books and similar work is made, and the report asserts that the former directors and officers, by disposing of the stock to themselves have left a discrepancy of $1,924,120. The report states that 34,984 shares of stock were sold by the officers and directors to themselves at 45 cents on the dollar, and that consequently almost $2,000,000 is due from them to the stockholders of the Distilling and Cattle Feeding company. Whether or not any action to recover the enormous amount thus said to be due is as yet undecided. General McNulta has called a conference of interested parties to consider the matter and what the decision will be is a question, but there is little doubt that the expert's report will result in a hot fight between the management and the Greenhut people.

THE WOODS RECEIVERSHIP.

That Granted at St. Paul Made General Throughout the Country.

MILWAUKEE, March 26.—The Walter A. Woods Harvester company receivership has received the sanction and protection of the United States court and the authority of the receivers has been extended to every state where the company has property.

Judge Jenkins, on application of J. Russell Parsons of New York, appointed Frank A. Seymour, Albert H. Lindeke and Peter McGowan of St. Paul receivers. The company is alleged to owe banks, corporations and individuals, in the states of Minnesota, Illinois and New York, over $900,000, part of which fell due in the last 30 days and the remainder will fall due in 30 days hence. The harvester company is the owner of small accounts and notes of farmers residing in states west of the Mississippi river to the amount of $1,100,000, and it is claimed that this vast amount will be largely wasted unless it is properly and carefully managed.

THURSTON RETURNS

THE HAWAIIAN MINISTER TO SAIL BY NEXT STEAMER

He Will Not Wait for Formal Action by His Government—The Decision Very Sudden and he Refuses to Discuss the Matter in Any Way.

NEW YORK, March 26.—A Washington special says: Minister Thurston of Hawaii has accepted the indignity imposed upon him by Secretary Gresham, and has decided to leave this country without waiting for a formal notice from his government to return. Mr. Thurston reached this conclusion suddenly and announced it to his friends during the afternoon. He declined to discuss the case in any manner and merely said that he would start for San Francisco at once and take a steamer sailing for Honolulu next week.

Muruaga's Successor.

MADRID, March 25.—Senor Dupuy de Lome has been appointed Spanish minister to the United States in succession to Senor Muruaga.

To Replace Calleja.

MADRID, March 26.—General Gamir will probably replace Captain General Calleja in Cuba.

WILL REFUSE TO OBEY.

Manitoba Legislature Likely to Reject the Order for Separate Schools.

WINNIPEG, March 26.—Public feeling is waxing very warm over the action of the Dominion government in ordering Manitoba to restore the separate Catholic parochial schools. In all Methodist pulpits Sunday the pastors preached strong sermons against any interference with Manitoba's national school system. The feeling of those present was evidenced by the liberal applause which followed almost every special point made by the preachers.

The remedial order of the Dominion government, compelling the province to grant separate schools, has arrived, but just what action the Greenway government will take is not known, although there is not the slightest doubt that it will not obey the order.

The Dominion's Order.

The remedial order requests that the Manitoba government re-enact the school law of 1890, abolishing the Roman Catholic schools, and that they give:

First—The right to build, maintain, equip, manage, conduct and support Roman Catholic schools in the manner provided for by the statutes which were repealed by the acts of 1890.

Second—The right to share proportionately in any grant made out of the public funds for the purpose of education.

Third—The right of exemption of such Roman Catholic schools from all payment or contribution to the support of any other schools.

A movement is on foot to get up a monster demonstration, at which the remedial order and the members of the Dominion cabinet will be burned in effigy.

Means Open Revolt.

This is unprecedented. It means open conflict between Manitoba and the Dominion. The storm which has been hovering over the country so long is likely to break forth in fury very soon. It is a war so bitter that it may wreck the confederation of the Dominion, if calm counsel, now unheeded, does not prevail. The Catholics are fighting for their parochial schools, while the Protestant majority, with equal resoluteness, declares that the parochial schools recently abolished by act of the Manitoba legislature shall never be re-established.

Parliament Summoned.

OTTAWA, March 26.—Parliament has been summoned for April 18. The announcement of a session was made immediately after the cabinet council at which a date was decided upon, and the finishing touches given to one of the most important constitutional deliverances that the Canadian privy council has uttered in many years—the decision in the Manitoba minority appeal.

THE DEBS CASE.

United States Supreme Court Listening to Arguments.

WASHINGTON, March 26.—The United States supreme court has began the hearing of arguments of the case of Eugene V. Debs and others. The counsel numbered three on the side of the defendants, headed by Hon. Lyman Trumbull, and including Messrs. S. S. Gregory and G. S. Darrow. Attorney General Olney, Assistant Whitney and Edwin Walker, special United States attorney, appeared for the government. The proceedings in the court developed that the question at issue was not complex. Debs and his associates ask for a writ of habeas corpus relieving them from the sentence passed upon them by Judge Woods. The fact was also developed that the main contention of the petitioners would be that the original bill stated no case cognizable in chancery and that therefore the injunction was void, and that the persons at whom it was aimed were not bound to observe it.

RESIGNED THE PRESIDENCY.

President of the Reichstag Quits on Account of a Snub for Bismarck.

BERLIN, March 25.—The reichstag by a vote of 163 to 146, rejected the proposal of the president of the reichstag, Herr Von Levelzow, that the house congratulate Prince Bismarck upon his birthday, whereupon Herr Von Levelzow, amid vociferous cheers from the members of the right, announced that he resigned the presidency.

McAuliffe and Griffo Matched.

NEW YORK, March 24.—Jack McAuliffe and Young Griffo were matched to fight on or about Oct. 10 for the lightweight championship, at 135 pounds. The match will be for $10,000 a side.

ERWIN'S EXCEPTIONS.

The Tall Pine Gives Reasons Why Hayward Should Have a New Trial.

MINNEAPOLIS, March 25.—W. W. Erwin, counsel for Harry T. Hayward, presented his bill of exceptions to the verdict rendered against his client of murder in the first degree. He makes the usual formal points that the verdict was against the law and the evidence, rendered under the influence of passion and prejudice, and that the rulings of the court were wrong. He also alleges that new evidence has been discovered justifying a retrial. This evidence was printed in a Minneapolis paper recently. It goes on to show that Miss Ging was eating dinner at the Dairy restaurant on the night of the murder, after 7 o'clock, and could not therefore have been on the Boulevard, where witnesses Blixt and Wilson claim to have seen her at that time.

DECIDED BY RICKS.

Foreign Born Women Married to American Citizens Need No Naturalization.

CLEVELAND, March 25.—Judge Augusta J. Ricks of the United States circuit court handed down an important decision reference to the question of whether a foreign born woman becomes a citizen of the United States when she marries a citizen of this country.

The decision was rendered on an application filed by Minnie R. Whitehead of this city for admission to citizenship in the United States of America. Mrs. Whitehead came to this country in 1867 and later married Thomas R. Whitehead, a native of the United States. Judge Ricks holds that Mrs. Whitehead became a citizen of the United States by her marriage to Thomas R. Whitehead, a citizen thereof and needs no certificate of naturalization from his court or any other to entitle her to the privileges and immunities such citizenship confers. United States Judge Hammond sitting with Judge Ricks concurred in this opinion.

M'KINLEY WOULD QUIT.

Indignant Because Asked to Advocate Free Silver.

NEW YORK, March 26.—A special from St. Augustine, Fla., says: Governor McKinley and party will be the guests of Henry M. Flagler, the Standard Oil millionaire, upon their arrival here. At Thomasville a letter was received by Governor McKinley, signed by a hundred or more citizens of Georgia, Democrats and Republicans alike, pledging him the solid vote of Georgia in the national Republican convention, and assuring him of a fighting chance to get the electoral vote of that state, provided that he will declare himself an advocate of free silver. The letter also intimated that the Republican national platform of 1896 might contain a silver plank.

When this letter was read aloud to him, Governor McKinley was indignant. He said:

"If the Republican party should declare for free silver, I would decline to become its candidate and I would quit the party forever."

Reed Will Make No Speeches.

PORTLAND, Me., March 26.—Hon. Thomas B. Reed stated to an Associated Press reporter that he declined the invitation to speak before the convention of college Republican clubs at Grand Rapids, Mich., on April 6, and that he will make no speeches this spring. Unless an extra session of congress calls him to Washington he will remain in Portland until the summer, when he will sail for Europe with his family.

LI HUNG WOUNDED

CHINESE ENVOY A MARK FOR AN ASSASSIN'S BULLET.

His Assailant a Young Jap—The Most Intense Excitement Caused by the News of the Crime—Thought the Incident Will Aid China's Position in the Peace Negotiations.

SIMONOSEKI, March 25.—As Li Hung Chang, the Chinese peace envoy, was returning to his lodgings in this place, after having attended a conference with Count Ito and Viscount Mutsu, the Japanese peace plenipotentiary, a young Japanese fired a pistol at him. The bullet sped straight, but most fortunately did no more harm than to inflict a wound in Li Hung Chang's face. At the time of sending this dispatch it is impossible to learn whether or not the wound is serious.

The attempt to assassinate the representative of the emperor of China caused the most intense excitement and on every side there were expressions of deep regret. The would-be murderer was arrested. It is believed that he was prompted to the crime by misguided patriotism.

The Wound Not Serious.

The name of the young man who attempted the life of Li Hung Chang is Koyama Bokunosuki. His reasons are unkown.

Li Hung Chang was shot in the cheek. It is believed that the wound is not serious. Prime Minister Ito has telegraphed to Hiroshima asking that Dr. Sato, the imperial physician, be sent to Simonoseki to attend the Chinese commissioner. The ministers of state and a number of other officials have visited Li Hung Chang and expressed their deep sorrow at the occurrence. Every precaution has been taken by the police and military to prevent any trouble. The government profoundly regrets the affair.

THE WOUND NOT DANGEROUS.

Unless Complications Arise Li Hung Chang Will Recover.

WASHINGTON, March 26.—Information coming to the Chinese legation is to the effect that Li Hung Chang's wound is not dangerous, except as complications may develop. It is in the fleshy part of the face, but, fortunately, no part of the skull has been fractured or any vital organ reached. Prince Li's advanced age and several constitutional disorders, which make him almost an invalid, however, may aggravate an otherwise harmless wound. On his arrival at Simonoseki, Li was too sick to leave the ship which brought him. He had to be carried about, this being a necessity in his case as well as an honor due his rank. Officials of the Japanese legation say the offender probably will be charged with treason, as the assault is not only against the person of Li Hung Chang, but also against the Japanese government.

Two surgeons are attending Li Hung Chang by imperial command. Li Hung Chang objects to the extraction of the bullet, which lies a centimetre under his left eye. The wound is three centimetres deep. Li sleeps well. The empress of Japan has sent two nurses to attend him. Letters and telegrams expressing regret and sympathy are pouring in from all directions.

Emperor Regrets It.

YOKOHAMA, March 25.—The news of the attempted assassination of Li Hung Chang created much excitement here. The emperor and empress will send a messenger to Simonoseki to express to the distinguished Chinese statesman their regrets at the most unfortunate occurrence.

LOOKING TO GLADSTONE.

Rosebery's Health Such as to Cause Considerable Speculation.

LONDON, March 25.—The condition of the health of Lord Rosebery is not changed, but there is no question that he is seriously ill, and that the complications of the political situation are such as to deprive the premier of the energy necessary to fight difficult and delicate questions. Under these circumstances it is not astonishing that the wildest rumors are circulated and that many people are turning their thoughts towards Mr. Gladstone as likely to be the man who will guide the Liberals once more out of political darkness and into the sunshine of political harmony. Mr. Gladstone is now on his way to London.

SUICIDE.

So Says the Coroner's Jury After a Thorough Investigation.

Cyprien P. DeMere, a Prominent Polk County Citizen and Ex-County Commissioner, Crosses the Great Divide.

BY THE CARBOLIC ACID ROUTE.

C. P. Demers, a well-known citizen of Polk county, whose post-office address was Brooks, came to the city on Thursday, of last week, and, after transacting some business proceeded to "bowl up" and continued in that line of business without taking much of any other nourishment until Monday morning, when he went to Sam Wallace's drug store where he bought a bottle of carbolic acid and going to the Montreal house he asked Landlord LeDue for a bed, saying that he wanted to sleep for a few hours and then start for home. The landlord conducted him to a room and he asked to be waked up at 11 o'clock, in time for dinner. When the landlord retired DeMers removed his coat and shoes, poured over one-half the contents of the bottle in a tumbler and took all but about a tea-spoonful of it and lying down upon the bed evidently died without a struggle, as when Landlord LeDue went up to call him at 11 o'clock he was cold and stiff. Mr. LeDue summoned aid, Dr. Farley was called but nothing could be done, as the man was beyond all earthly aid hours before, and a telegram was sent over to East Grand Forks to Coroner Dwyer, who came over on the first train; meantime the body had been removed to Chesterman's undertaking rooms to await an inquest. A jury was summoned, a post mortem examination showed that death resulted from carbolic acid, and after examining several witnesses the jury rendered a verdict of suicide during temporary insanity. The deceased had about ten dollars, some tax and other receipts, a watch and a few other articles of trifling value upon his person when the body was found. He leaves a wife and four or five children. He had his life insured for $1,000. The remains were taken out to his home on Tuesday and the funeral took place on Wednesday. Mr. DeMers was one of the most prominent farmers in the French colony, an old resident of Polk county, and was a man of a good deal of enterprise and energy. He was a member of the Odd-Fellows Lodge in Red Lake Falls. While, like all human beings he had his faults, there are many worse men at heart than was Cyprien P. DeMers.

Charged With Conspiracy.

NEW YORK, April 2.—William R. Wilder, an attorney, has sued the New York Bank Note company for $417 for professional services. As a counter-claim the New York Bank Note company sues for $100,000 damages from Wilder because of what the defense alleges to be his conspiracy with Russell Sage.

Left for Shiloh.

ST. JOSEPH, Mo., April 2.—General B. M. Prentiss, one of the two surviving generals who took part in the battle of Shiloh, has left for the battlefield, to be present at the unveiling of the monument on April 5. General Prentiss will be the only one of the surviving generals present on this occasion.

General Gooding Insane.

CRAWFORD AS DETECTIVE.

South Dakota's Attorney General Supposed to Be on Taylor's Scent.

PIERRE, S. D., April 2.—Attorney General Crawford has forwarded to a Pinkerton detective a letter over the state seal, asking that courtesies be granted him as an authorized agent of South Dakota in the Taylor matter. It was sent to a South American point, which will not be given out, but probably is Valparaiso, Chili, and it is supposed it is founded on a clue of Taylor's present location.

Western Trip for McKinley.

COLUMBUS, March 28.—It is stated here on good authority that arrangements are being made for a Western trip to be made this summer by Governor McKinley. Insurance Commissioner Hahn, who is now in California, is said to be preparing the governor's itinerary.

TEMPORARY PEACE

AN ARMISTICE DECLARED BETWEEN CHINA AND JAPAN.

This Action on Japan's Part Largely Due To the Attack on Li Hung Chang. Minister Willis Will Probably Take a Vacation—May Go To Japan.

TOKIO, March 31.—The emperor of Japan has declared an unconditional armistice.

WASHINGTON, March 31.—The news that an unconditional armistice had been declared by the emperor of Japan, was confirmed at the Japanese legation, where it was stated that a cablegram to this effect had been received from the home government. The declaration of an armistice was most welcome news to the Chinese legation, although it was accepted with the stolidity and passive dignity which is characteristic of the race.

ST. PETERSBURG, March 31.—Advices here from Tokio say that the decision of the emperor of Japan to declare an unconditional armistice was greatly due to the extreme indignation aroused by the attack on Viceroy Li Hung Chang.

KNOW NOTHING OF IT.

The Demand for Thurston's Recall Not Made Public in Honolulu.

SAN FRANCISCO, March 28.—The steamship Australia has arrived from Honolulu. The latest Hawaiian advices contain no reference to the demand made by Secretary Gresham for the recall of Minister Thurston, and it is evident that no knowledge of this diplomatic incident has reached the Hawaiian people. Whether the Hawaiian government has any knowledge of the state of affairs at Washington is simply a matter of conjecture.

Martial law was declared off March 18. The military commission has been adjourned and the larger part of the 190 prisoners brought before that body are now working out their sentences in quarries and on roads. Interest in the past few days has centered principally in the sessions of the advisory council, which has been passing laws bearing directly upon the recent rebellion.

YBARRA REMOVED.

Commander Who Fired on the Allianca Suspended by Spain.

NEW YORK, March 31.—A special dispatch from Santiago de Cuba says Lieutenant Ybarra has been relieved from command of the Spanish cruiser Conde de Venadito, which fired upon the American steamer Allianca. Captain Matenshas been appointed to succeed Lieutenant Ybarra. Senor Capriles, civil governor of the province of Santiago, has resigned.

WILL REVOLUTIONIZE BUSINESS.

Scheme to Use Electricity by the Vanderbilt Roads.

NEW YORK, March 31.—There is said to be a big scheme on foot among the New York Central capitalists to purchase all the water power on the Black river between Carthage and Dexter, including those in this city, for the purpose of utilizing them in the generation of electricity. The electricity is to be used as the motive power on the Vanderbilt railroads in Northern New York. Should the scheme go through there will be one grand overhead trolley system consisting of four wires over each track. Connection is to be made with Niagara Falls and the power at Waddington, on the St. Lawrence river. If the scheme should become a reality it will revolutionize the business interests of Northern New York.

A DISASTROUS FIRE.

Milwaukee Property to the Value of a Million Destroyed.

MILWAUKEE, March 29.—Lower Grand avenue, where the heart of the wholesale and retail commerce of the West Side throbs, was the scene early in the morning of one of the most serious conflagrations in the history of the city. Some of the leading mercantile institutions of Milwaukee are in ruins; the splendid Y. M. C. A. building, one of the finest and best equipped in the country, is gone; the public library, with its 80,000 volumes, some of which could never be replaced, has had a narrow escape, the two top floors being badly burned and much damage was done by water.

The fire is the most disastrous since the Third ward conflagration of Oct, 28, 1892, and the pecuniary loss will exceed $1,000,000.

THE SAME HERE.

Says the Brainerd Tribune:—"Stillwater has an ordinance that forbids children under sixteen years of age from being on the streets after 9 o'clock. At that hour the fire bell sounds, and then all children under that age are apprehended who are not at home. It is said the law is rigidly enforced by the police, and is doing good and gaining favor. It certainly is a good thing to keep children off the street at that age, and wouldn't be a bad thing for Brainerd."

HEIRS AGREE ON TERMS.

Famous Contest Over the Davis Millions Ended.

BUTTE, Mon., March 30.—The great Davis will case has been settled by a judgment of the court, amounting to a victory for the First National bank heirs and the proponents of the John A. Davis will, but making liberal allowance by agreement with the New York and Boston contestants, represented by Henry A. Root, for whom Colonel R. G. Ingersoll was leading counsel in the great legal battle of 1891. The estate was valued then at $7,000,000. The disputed will was probated Wednesday by consent of all parties to the suit and the following decree of distribution entered:

The Sheffield heirs, or the children of Asa Davis, are given one-twenty-fifth of the estate. The remainder is divided between the heirs of John A. Davis, who receive nineteen-forty-fourths, and the contestants will receive twenty-five-forty-fourths. Andrew J. Davis retains the First National bank stock.

All parties to the suit are satisfied with the terms. The case will probably be heard of no more. Should other heirs appear within a year the case can be reopened. This point is very important.

IT WORKS WELL.

Some Comments of Governors Whose States Have Tried Woman Suffrage.

BALTIMORE, April 1.—In a discussion of the subject of woman suffrage at the Friends Circle, Mr. J. K. Taylor presented extracts from letters just received from the governors of Western states.

Governor Morrill of Kansas writes: "There has been no complaint. It seems to be successful."

Gov. McIntyre of Colorado: "Their advent into political life will positively and permanently benefit all the people."

Governor Richards of Wyoming: "Women are allowed all the privileges that men have in voting. They are not allowed to sit on juries and do not ask for it any more than they ask for military nights."

Justice Grosbeck, chief justice of the supreme court of Wyoming: "It has been tried and not found wanting."

RIDDLED ROBBERS.

Daring Hold-Up in Which Desperadoes Get a Hot Reception.

GREENWOOD, Ky., March 28.—One of the most daring, and at the same time one of the most unsuccessful attempts at train robbery, occurred at 2:30 a. m. in the Southern portion of Kentucky, when six men undertook to rob the southbound train No. 3, Queen and Crescent, which left Cincinnati at 4 p. m. One of the six was killed outright; another died at 4 o'clock; a third, giving the name of Miller, now lies here severely wounded, and the other three have not yet been heard from. The train was delayed not more than 10 minutes, and reached Chattanooga at 8 a. m., on time.

SMALLPOX IN THE UNITED STATES.

Three Hundred and Seventy-three Deaths Reported.

WASHINGTON, April 3.—The abstract of sanitary reports, as made by the surgeon general, shows the presence of smallpox in 21 states of the Union. Of the cities Milwaukee has suffered most from this disease during the winter, recording 524 cases and 164 deaths; Philadelphia had 244 cases and 26 deaths; Chicago, 240 cases and 44 deaths; Washington, 51 cases and 9 deaths; St. Louis, 105 cases and 35 deaths; New York, 55 cases and 10 deaths. There appears to have been, all told, 373 deaths from smallpox in the United States during the winter.

ENGLAND TOO SMALL.

Remarked That the Prince and Princess of Wales Are Seldom There Together.

LONDON, April 1.—With the Prince of Wales' return from the Rivera, the announcement is made that the Princess of Wales is going to Copenhagen next week on a visit to her parents, the king and queen of Denmark. This has started gossip afresh and has brought into prominence the fact that the prince and princess of Wales seldom remain in the same country together. The princess has spent very little time in England during the past two years.

FIVE SUFFOCATED.

Terrible Tragedy Reported From a North Dakota Town.

MINOT, N. D., March 28.—The residence of Sinius Christianson, a carpenter by trade, was consumed. Five children, from 3 to 15 years old, suffocated in the flames.

Predict Heap Big Water.

CHAMBERLAIN, S. D., April 2.—The Sioux nation has produced weather prophets who evidently desire to become rivals of Professors Foster and Hicks. The Sioux prophets predict that there will be "heap big water" this spring. They base their conjectures on their past experiences with open winters, and claim that a winter with little snow is certain to be followed by immense floods during the spring and summer.

Have Resumed Smuggling Chinese.

NEW YORK, March 31.—The customs authorities are in receipt of information that some of the persons engaged in smuggling Chinamen, exposed a year ago, are resuming business and small batches of Celestials are arriving here both from Canada and Cuba without going through the legal formalities.

MUCH CONCERNED

Grave Cause for Apprehension in the Venezuelan Boundary Dispute.

PRESENT SITUATION ALARMING

Armed Bodies of British and Venezuelans in the Disputed Territory.

WASHINGTON, April 2.—The secretary of state is very much concerned these days by the Venezuelan problem. The British ultimatum delivered to Nicaragua is not a source of present apprehension, for it is not now believed that the British will take any action in the way of attempting to acquire any territory in that direction or even to jeopardize the property of Americans in Nicaragua by a bombardment in their efforts to force a collection of the indemnity demanded from Nicaragua. These are the two moves that might cause the United States to interfere. But in the case of the Venezuelan boundary dispute there is much graver cause for apprehension. It appears that our ambassador, Mr. Bayard,

Has Not Succeeded

to inducing the British government to give heed to the request submitted by him at the direction of congress, that the boundary dispute be submitted to arbitration. The British are profuse in their declaration of a willingness to arbitrate the title to the lands west of the Schoomberg line, but in the view of the state department this is a pure evasion of the real issue, for there never has been any reasonable assertion of a British right to this territory, and it is the territory lying east of this line that forms the substance of the contention. The present situation is believed to be alarming, as and Venezuelans are pressing each other closely in the disputed territory, and there may be a hostile clash at any moment. The administration has been considering carefully the course to be pursued in each case, and it is entirely probable that if the British persist in bringing about such a collision through a failure to heed the repeated warnings and requests of the United States to submit the matter to a fair arbitration, then the United States will feel obliged to follow the moral aid it has given to Venezuela in this matter by more substantial assistance.

INDIGNANT VETERANS.

Shiloh Battlefield Association Resents Lack of Recognition.

MONTICELLO, Ills., April 2.—The members of the Shiloh Battlefield association feel indignant that their association has been ignored by the secretary of war in the appointment of the Shiloh commission, as they had asked the appointment in recognition of what they had done in forwarding the movement. The commission ignores not only the association but the state of Illinois, which had more troops in the battle than any state in the Union, yet it has no representation on the commission at all. The association holds the land of the battlefield under legal option until March 4, 1896, and they will undoubtedly purchase the land under the option, and proceed to improve the same as a battlefield park, under the charter of the association which has been granted by the State of Tennessee for this especial purpose. A syndicate of wealthy men has offered to furnish the money for the purchase of the entire battlefield for the association.

SECOND CLASS MAIL MATTER.

Postmaster General Bissell Issues an Order on the Subject.

WASHINGTON, April 2.—Postmaster General Bissell has issued an order restricting second class matter to actual subscribers for journals entitled to the pound rate. He directs that hereafter "postmasters will see that the publications offered for mailing have a legitimate list of subscribers made up, not of persons whose names were furnished by advertisers or by others interested in the circulation of the publication, but of those who voluntarily seek it and pay for it with their own money. Although this rule is not intended to interfere with any genuine case where one person subscribes for a limited number of copies for another."

Election Officers Held for Trial.

KANSAS CITY, April 2.—Charles S. Owsley, ex-recorder of votes, and his former chief deputy, Harry G. Brislow, gave bonds in the sum of $1,500 each before Judge Wofford of the criminal court, to answer charges of permitting the registration of fictitious names. They were indicted by the grand jury last week.

"The People Of the Northwest portion of the United States can congratulate themselves on having the elegant travelling accommodations offered by the North-Western line between Minneapolis, St. Paul and Chicago which the wealthiest and oldest roads in the effete East have not yet found it possible to excel.—The Times, Monticello, Minn.

ALL HAVE REBELLED.

Only One Province in Cuba Loyal to the Spanish Government.

TAMPA, Fla., March 31.—Puerto Principe has been declared in a state of rebellion by the Spanish government. This makes four out of five of the provinces of the island in a state of revolution. If the report that Maximo Gomez is in Cuba at the head of the uprising in Puerto Principe is confirmed, passengers from Havana declare that so soon as this is officially known the whole island will rise en masse.

Insurgents Successful.

Two engagements were had, in Bayamo and one in Holguin. Colonel Santocilde was in command of the Spanish forces, and General Masso of the Cubans in the former place, and in the latter General Garrich was in command of the Spanish soldiers and General Miro of the Cubans. The insurgents were successful and had not reinforcements arrived, Colonel Santocilde and his troops would have fallen into the hands of the insurgents.

Raises Cuban Hopes.

The dispatch from Madrid saying that Martinez Campos has been ordered to Cuba raises the hopes of the Cubans who say it is the best proof of the gravity of the movement.

Colonel A. Figuerdo said in an interview that he believes this dispatch confirms the rumors that Puerto Principe has arisen and Gomez is in command there. Otherwise I do not believe Spain would take such vigorous steps. I am glad Martinez Campos goes to Cuba, for if Maximo Gomez is in the field, he will defeat Campos and then, he is the only man of any importance in the Spanish army.

A battle was fought in Guanahano on Saturday. The Cubans were victorious. Two engagements occurred in Manzanillo this week. Captain Guerra was in command of the Cubans and Colonel Avois of the Spanish forces. The latter were defeated with heavy losses, including two officers.

Many of the Spanish troops arriving in Havana are sick.

The Deal Falls Through.

APPLETON, Wis., April 1.—The options on 50 Wisconsin paper mills expire at noon. Promoter Butterworth has not been heard from for several weeks and it is now impossible to close the deal within the specified time, consequently it will fall through. The Wilson Theatre Company.

This popular company will commence a week's engagement at the Grand on next Monday evening, presenting an entire new repertoire of successful comedy dramas at popular prices. The company comes here endorsed by the entire press of Fargo, Brainerd, St. Cloud, and a number of other towns, and no doubt will be well patronized. Mr. Harry A. Glacier, the leading man, has won for himself an enviable reputation throughout the east, having filled important engagements in some of the leading theatres in the largest cities. The supporting company is said to equal a great many of the companies playing at much higher prices. On Monday evening the popular southern drama, "Wife for Wife," will be presented for the first time in Crookston, cast to the full strength of the company. Ladies will be admitted to this performance free if accompanied by one who has purchased a reserved seat ticket.

Columbus, Ohio, March 29th 1895.

EDITOR JOURNAL:

A most profitable improvement for the Red River Valley would be a railroad from Helberg to Crookston, with two branches one running northwest through a corner of Marshall county, Minnesota; into Walsh and Pembina counties N. D., the other branch running south west by west through a corner of Grand Forks into Traill county N. D. It would be fair to bond those counties for it would raise the price of wheat in the whole region, whether near the proposed line or not. It would add ten dollars to the value of every acre in the whole valley.

John D. Rockefeller who controls the D. M. & N. R. R., could negotiate sale of bonds.

THOMAS SHARP.

The Grim Reaper.

Early on Wednesday morning, at 5 o'clock, the grim reaper, death, entered the dwelling of one of our most prominent citizens, Archie McKinnon, and removed therefrom the light of the household—the lovely young wife, after a brief illness from diabetes.

Kate O'Brien had been a resident of this city some five years before she was married to Mr. McKinnon about six years ago, and had won many friends by her many lovable qualities, to whom this news will come as a personal loss. She leaves six brothers, four of whom are residents of this city and two in Illinois; a mother and sister also living in Illinois, and a young husband to mourn an irreparable loss. At the time of going to press the hour of the funeral is not definitely known, but it will probably be at 10 o'clock on Saturday, at St. Mary's church. The mother and sister and one brother are expected from Illinois.

STATE LEGISLATURE

Tuesday, March 20.

SENATE—Senator A. G. Johnson presided over the committee of the whole. The first bill taken up was S. F. 50, Senator Larson's bill amending the law relating to the public examiner, so that private banks shall be under his control. An amendment making the date of examination indefinite was adopted and the bill was recommended for passage.

HOUSE—The feature of the day's proceedings was the fight over Mr. Sanders' bill to prevent the commitment or detention of persons charged with any crime in any institution not directly under the control and management of public officials. Ramsey county members opposed it on the ground that it was an attack upon the House of the Good Shepherd in Ramsey county. Most of the Minneapolis members also opposed the measure, but when a vote was reached it was recommended to pass.

Wednesday, March 27.

SENATE—Senator Culkin called up his railroad resolution in the senate Wednesday, and it started a debate. The resolution calls on the railroad and warehouse commission for a report as to its power in fixing transportation charges in this state whether the present short haul rates are comparatively excessive, the cost of rail roads, etc. It was finally adopted—30 to 2.

Ozmun's civil service bill to protect competent state and county employes, passed. Also the census bill and 18 others of less importance.

HOUSE—The Jacobson and Schurmeier prison labor bills were the special order in the house in the morning. The Jacobson bill was indefinitely postponed. The Schurmeier bill which had been indorsed by the labor unions of the state, but opposed by the prison officials, was then recommended for passage by a vote of 56 to 52. Both the bills provide for the employment of the convicts under either the "piece price" or "state account" systems. Before the bill was passed an amendment was adopted limiting the number of convicts who may be employed in one industry to 25 per cent of those incarcerated in the institution.

Thursday, March 28.

SENATE—The senate passed several important measures, among them the age of consent bill.

Senator Culkin's bill bringing national building and loan associations under the usury law was next taken up and after being dissected by the lawyers in the senate was defeated. There were 29 votes against the bill and 16 for it.

The bill of Representative McInnis to establish a normal school at Duluth passed by a vote of 30 to 12, and only needs the signature of the governor to become a law.

HOUSE—The house passed the Staples pine land bill after a warm discussion by a vote of 73 to 35.

The Howard charter bill, which was a special order for the afternoon, was then taken up and read at length. When the reading had been finished several attempts were made to amend it but failed—and the bill passed—95 to 2.

The Sheehan home rule bill was then taken up and passed after a short but hot debate. J. D. Jones led the opposition and Eli Warner was the main pusher for the bill. The vote was 65 to 29.

Friday, March 29.

SENATE—Senator Spencer introduced a joint resolution which provides for the appointment of commissioners from this state to meet and confer with like commissioners from Wisconsin in regard to the annexation of Superior to Duluth.

Senator Stevens presided over the committee of the whole and pushed the senate through the general order list. The following are among the bills recommended to pass:

To authorize the leasing of the state capitol lands in Kandiyohi county.

To amend the law so as to allow grand and petit jurors to receive $2 per day in Ramsey county, being the same price allowed in all other counties of the state.

HOUSE—The house disposed of the Loring Park capitol site proposition by unanimously adopting the report of the judiciary committee.

After reciting the manner in which the city came in possession of the park the report says:

"From the examination of the briefs submitted and from such further examination as your committee was able to make we are of the opinion that the city of Minneapolis has no authority to convey a legal title of Loring park to the state. That it is beyond the power of the legislature to confer such authority."

Saturday, March 30.

SENATE—Fifty-three bills were introduced and one passed.

The total number of bills introduced last session was 578. The last file number today was 733, and, of course, other bills may appear during the remaining three weeks of the session.

HOUSE—A large batch of bills was introduced, this being the last day for that purpose, and the house, in committee of the whole, recommended several bills for passage, including Mr. Dale's constitutional amendment prohibiting the appropriating of any public funds to any corporation, association or for any other purpose unless it be under control of public officials.

Three senate bills relating to the state public schools and dependent children were also recommended favorably. Senator Spencer's bill to determine the boundary between St. Louis and Lake counties and Senator Stebbins' providing for a fourth hospital for the insane received the same recommendation.

Monday, April 1.

SENATE—Over a dozen bills were passed, among them the following:

Providing for the lease of the state capitol lands in Kandiyohi county, Minnesota, the drainage of the same and the repeal of chap. 132, general laws 1891.

To regulate the payment of grand and petit jurors' fees and mileage in the district courts.

To provide for the sanitary regulation of bakeries and other establishments for the manufacture of bread and other food products.

HOUSE—Among the principal measures recommended for passage were the following:

Providing for application of the principle of civil service reform to the grain inspection department of the state.

To amend the drainage law by providing for side ditches and appropriating $5,000 yearly for executing the law.

To make municipal corporations subject to garnishee proceedings in certain cases.

To prevent the spread of noxious weeds on highways.

Appropriation $20,000 a year in addition to the present sum allowed for higher education.

HE HAD NERVE.

Most Drummers Have, but This One Could Give Them Points.

There is one kind of merchant detestable to the traveling man, and that is the individual who knows it all and orders his goods direct from the house, instead of allowing the traveler to take his order. There is such a man in a town not many miles from Indianapolis. He has no use for traveling men, and if one of them happens to drop into his store the old grocery keeper either ignores him altogether or gives him a terrible tongue lashing. The old fellow was caught once, however, and those who have been unfortunate enough to run up against him are wondering how it was done. The man who sold him a bill of goods heard before he reached the town what a tough old customer he was, and he made up his mind to sell him a bill of goods or die in the attempt. He had been told how every scheme failed, and he resolved to try a new game—that of making him mad. He went into the store bright and early, whistling a merry tune. The proprietor was back at his desk, and the drummer "breezed" the clerk.

"Where is it?" he asked.

"What, where, how?" exclaimed the clerk, half scared to death.

"The chief mogul, the high muck-a-muck, his royal nibs, his jaglots, the boss," answered the traveling man.

"Oh, you mean Mr. S——. There he is, back there."

The traveling man walked back to the desk and tossed his card over to the grocery keeper. "Is this Mr. S——?" he asked.

The grocery keeper kept on writing and paid no attention to the traveling man than if he were a post.

"Sey, you baldheaded old guy, if you are deaf and dumb, why don't you hang a sign on your back so people will know it?"

The last remark brought the old fellow to time, and he opened out in great shape.

"Young man," he said, "I don't want anything to do with you, and, moreover, I do not propose to be insulted in my own house. If you are not out of here in one minute, I will either throw you into the street or call the police and have you arrested."

"The —— you will," replied the drummer. "I don't know about that. I represent the well known firm of Seizeall & Holdem of Indianapolis, and I came here to sell you a bill of goods. You have the reputation of killing a traveling man every day, simply because he is trying to earn an honest living. Everybody in Indianapolis told me that it was impossible to sell you anything. They said your currants were half flies, your cheese moldy, and that you were a back number. I told them they lied, and now, to prove that they do not know what they are talking about, I want to send in your order."

The traveling man opened up his sample case and sold a good order. His nerve did it.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

Knife Blades.

Pocketknife blades are very unevenly tempered. Even in so called standard cutlery some blades are hard and some are soft. For the latter there is no remedy, but the temper of hard blades can easily be drawn slightly. Take a kitchen poker and heat it redhot, have the blade that is to be drawn bright and hold it on the poker for a moment. When the color runs down to violet blue, stick the blade into a piece of tallow or beef suet until cold.—New York Ledger.

Not a Gold Cure.

A Swansea tradesman, being troubled with a headache, bought two medicinal tablets and put them in his vest pocket. When it was time to take a tablet, he opened his mouth, shut his eyes and gulped one down. He was relieved of his headache and went on his way rejoicing. Later in the day he found the two tablets in his pocket. When he discovered half a sovereign missing, the pains in his head shifted to his stomach. —Cardiff Mail.

Shoestrings were first worn in 1797, and the English buckle makers presented a petition to the throne asking that these articles be prohibited.

A pair of boots, reaching half way to the knee, were sold in Pompeii for $3.

Remedy For Chafed Surfaces.

An experienced mother recommends the following recipe for an ointment to be applied to chafed surfaces, cuts and chapped hands: Take equal parts of beeswax, fresh lard and sweet oil. Melt the beeswax, measure it, add the same quantity of melted lard and oil and stir constantly until the mixture becomes stiff. Put it in a box or wide mouthed bottle ready for use.—Ladies' Home Journal.

Knew All About It.

Overheard in crowd watching a balloon:

Mrs. Harris—How do they make the balloon go up?

Mrs. Gamp—They toss some sand out, to be sure.

Mrs. Harris—And what do they do when they want to come down?

Mrs. Gamp—They put some more in, of course.—Pick Me Up.

CHAPTER XVI.

"YOU SHALL NOT DIE."

Scarcely had the court martial brought in a verdict when an order came to Colonel Maynard to move his brigade across the Chickamauga creek by way of Dyers' bridge, to be ready early the following day to make a reconnoissance beyond the Pigeon mountains. He ordered an ambulance for his prisoner to ride in, since he had no option but to take her with him. The distance to be traversed was but a few miles, and although it was nearly sunset before the command broke camp it was barely dark when the tents were pitched in the new situation. Luckily a house was found for the reception of the prisoner, and the headquarters of the colonel commanding were established near it.

As soon as Maynard's tent was pitched he went inside and shut himself up from every one. The matter of the life in his keeping, his desire to save his prisoner, the impossibility of his doing so except by betraying his trust and conniving at her escape, were weighing terribly upon him. A desperate struggle between his duty as an officer and his repulsion at carrying out a sentence upon a woman which had once been passed upon himself was driving him well nigh distracted. One thing was certain—he could not save Miss Baggs without sacrificing himself. He was ready to sacrifice himself if he could do so honorably. He might even consider the matter of doing that which he had no right to do, but since the devil may care days of his scouting a new world had opened to him, which made the struggle more complicated than it would then have been. He had a wife whom he loved devotedly, and any obloquy he might take upon himself must be shared by her and his son. He knew that if he could conceive it to be his duty, or if he could make up his mind without the approval of his conscience to connive at the prisoner's escape, he would have a fair chance of success. He was charged with the execution, and this would give him power over her person. On the other hand, such a violation of trust was too horrible even for consideration, and if he did not so regard it the penalty he must suffer—disgrace, if not death—would well nigh kill his wife. For a long while he revolved these considerations in his mind and at last came to a decision. He would suffer the torture of carrying out the sentence. He would do his duty to his country, his wife and his son.

He had scarcely arrived at this decision when a message came from the prisoner asking to see him.

The racking of his whole nature, which had been partially allayed by his decision, came back to him with the summons. He dreaded an interview. He felt that the resolution he had formed was of too little inherent strength to warrant placing himself under so great a temptation. But his memory took him back to the jail in which he had been confined on the eve of his own intended execution at Chattanooga, and he thought how he would have regarded any one who would refuse him such a request at such a time. He got up and walked over to the house where the prisoner was confined.

He paused a few moments before entering, in order to collect himself, then walked slowly up the steps. The guard stood at attention and brought his piece to a "present," but Maynard did not see him, did not return his salute. He opened the door, entered the house and in a few minutes was in a room in which the prisoner was confined. She was standing by a window. As he entered she turned and stood with her hands hanging clasped before her, her sorrowful eyes fixed steadily upon him.

"Colonel Maynard," she said, "I have sent for you to ask you to deliver my last messages. I once met you in the house of one who is dear to you. There I received shelter from the storm which raged without, but which was nothing to me beside another evil that threatened me. I was sore pressed and in great danger of capture. The women in that house—an elderly lady, a young girl who visited there and your wife—took me in at a great risk to themselves. Your wife certainly had much at stake, for your honor might be involved. I have sent for you now to ask you to say to them that I have treasured their remembrance and their kindness to me."

She waited a moment for him to accept the trust. She might have waited till the crack of doom without a reply. He had no power to utter a word. He simply bowed.

"I desire also to intrust this keepsake to you, to be sent to my brother."

She took a locket from about her neck and held it up before him. On it was painted a miniature of a young man in the uniform of a Confederate officer. Maynard looked at it and started back, with a cry, as if pierced with a redhot iron.

"He—he is"—

"My brother."

"Oh, God!" He staggered to the wall and leaned against it, shivering.

"You know him, colonel. There is no necessity for deceit now. I have long known the singular circumstances that surround you and him—that you both loved the same woman; that you won."

"And that twice—twice he gave me my life?"

"That he never told me."

"Ah, he never told you that?" replied Maynard, a kind of wonder in his tones.

"When at Mrs. Fain's plantation, I discovered under whose roof I was sheltered. Your wife had never seen me, and I determined that it would be best for all that I should not make myself known."

Maynard stood in amazement at these developments, in horror at the situation as he now knew it to be.

"And you are the sister of Cameron Fitz Hugh?"

"I am. I am Caroline Fitz Hugh."

"You shall not die."

When Colonel Maynard spoke these words, there was a grandeur in his tone, his figure, the lines of his countenance, the light in his eye, strangely inconsistent with a resolution he had made the moment before they were uttered. He had on the instant reversed his decision made not ten minutes before to do his duty, in the ordinary acceptance of what that duty was. He had determined to save the woman before him, even if it were necessary to take upon himself far greater ignominy than the death to which she was sentenced. There was silence between them, during which Miss Fitz Hugh stood looking at him in admiration, mingled with inquiry. She knew that some secret charm was at work within, but she did not know what it was.

"How can my death be prevented?"

"I am charged with your execution. I will take you to your lines myself this night."

What was that subtle influence, far stronger than battalions of infantry or batteries of artillery, which gave it to one not present, unconscious of his power, to hold Mark Maynard over a precipice and to cast him into a black gulf below? Was it circumstances that had a year before led Fitz Hugh to accept the very part Maynard was now called upon to play? Was it love that had given Maynard the bride Fitz Hugh was to have possessed? Was it some invisible fiend that had made Maynard a robber of that bride from the man to whom he twice owed his life and was now bringing on his punishment? These were indirect causes, but they cannot explain that inexpressible, intangible sense of honor which will lead a man, to speak paradoxically, to commit a crime and sacrifice himself at the same time for another.

The expression on Miss Fitz Hugh's face as she heard Maynard speak words which would save her from death and give her liberty underwent a change. For a moment after they were spoken there was a delighted look, but as she realized what they meant to the man who would save her it was transformed into an expression which can only be described as bordering on the confines of angel land. There was a holy look in her eyes, a radiance of purity from the soul expressed in every feature. There was the superhuman attribute of choosing death before life and liberty at the price of wrong.

"No, colonel, we Fitz Hughs cannot accept sacrifice, and especially wrong, from others. We give; we are not accustomed to receive."

Maynard stood gazing at her with a look as if in refusing the sacrifice she had stabbed him.

"What then," he said at last, "can I do?"

"Send the news of my condition, of my expected"—she shuddered at pronouncing the word—"execution to our lines. Knowing that I am condemned, they can bring what influence they may be able to save me."

"It will avail nothing."

"Try it. Fate, luck, Providence works strangely at times. Let us push on and leave the rest to a higher power."

The colonel looked at his watch. "It is now half past 9. We are but a few miles from the Confederate lines. Your brother is"—

"In ——'s cavalry division and on the Confederate right. I heard from him only a few days ago. He was then at Ringold."

"That is not far from here."

"There may be time," she said hopefully.

"Some one must steal through the lines. If not shot, he may accomplish something. In half an hour I shall be"—

"You?"

"Yes, I! I will not trust this only thread on which your life hangs to any one else, though I confess," he added gloomily, "I have no confidence in it."

"No, colonel, I cannot accept this from you. You are the commander here and are all that stands between me and death. You must remain here and send a messenger."

"Who would I dare intrust with such a message?"

"Send for the man who captured me, Corporal Ratigan. Let him bear the message."

"He?"

The colonel looked at her a moment, as if to question why this man should be so trusted, but her eyes were lowered. He knew there was a secret which it did not become him to pry into.

"I will send him, if he can be found at once. If not, I will go myself. And if the mission fails"—

The words were not finished, for he well knew how precious time was, and turning from the room and the house strode rapidly toward his tent.

He had gone but a dozen paces before he heard some one call.

"Colonel!"

He did not hear. The call was repeated.

"Colonel!"

A man approached him, whom in the darkness he did not recognize.

"Is there no hope, colonel?" the man asked in a choked voice.

"Who are you?"

"The man who captured her," pointing to the house. "Oi'll never draw saber again."

"Corporal Ratigan?"

"The same."

"This is fortunate. Come with me."

The two started together to a thicket wherein they would neither be observed nor heard.

"Oi'm hangin round, ye see, colonel. Oi'm away from camp without leave. Oi hope they'll shoot me for a deserter."

Colonel Maynard did not speak till they reached the thicket. Then, turning and facing Ratigan, he said earnestly:

"You would like to save her, would you not?"

"God knows I would."

"Then go to the picket line and get through unobserved if possible. Go to Ringold and find a Confederate officer—Cameron Fitz Hugh, if he is there. Tell him that his sister is condemned to be shot at sunrise tomorrow morning. Say that Colonel Mark Maynard sends him this information, that he may use whatever influence he possesses—take any measures he may consider honorable—to save her. Tell him," the colonel lowered his voice, "that I offered to attempt to do so, taking ruin upon myself, but she would not accept the sacrifice. Go; there is no time to lose. When the sun rises, it will be too late."

"Oh, colonel," cried the man in agony, "there is so little time!"

"Go! It is not yet 10 o'clock. We have six hours."

The corporal was moving away when the colonel stopped him.

"You will need the countersign."

Ratigan returned, and the colonel whispered it in his ear, "Carnifax Ferry."

CHAPTER XVII.

RATIGAN'S MISSION.

The extreme left of the Army of the Cumberland, from which Corporal Ratigan started to go through the lines, was held only by cavalry and mounted infantry, and these widely separated. There was no regular picket line such as usually exists between armies confronting each other where the different branches of the service are represented in one continuous line. Consequently the corporal had a far better chance to get through than under ordinary circumstances.

Passing over the Pea Vine ridge, he descended the other side sloping to a small stream called Pea Vine creek. It was essential that he slip through between the Union vedettes unseen, for if observed he would be taken for a deserter and either shot or sent in to the headquarters of his regiment. The vedettes were principally on the roads, and the corporal, believing that they would be looking for an enemy on routes over which cavalry could best advance, selected one least advantageous for a horse to follow. Wherever he could find a thick clump of trees or low growth, a knoll, a ravine, indeed anything difficult for a horse to pass, he would go over or through it. Now he would stop to listen for some sound such as a horse is liable to make, and now would steal on his hands and knees or crawl on his belly over some eminence where, if he should stand upright, his body would make a silhouette against the sky. On crossing a bit of level ground he suddenly heard a horse's "splutter." He was near a clump of bushes in which he lost no time in concealing himself. A cavalryman rode by within 50 feet of him, walking his horse slowly, the butt of his carbine resting on his right leg, and in a position to be used readily. He was patrolling a beat. Ratigan waited till he had gone past, then darted onward to trees which, from their irregular line, he judged grew beside the creek. He was not disappointed and was soon standing in shallow water, resting for a few minutes under a low bank.

Once past the creek he felt that one-half his danger was ended. He had doubtless got beyond the range of his own comrades, and now came a great danger of meeting the Confederate pickets. Leaving the creek, he ascended a slight eminence and made a survey of the surrounding country. All was silent, except that he could hear an occasional sound like a distant burst of laughter, or a shout from the direction of Ringold, in his front. Presently he heard the unmistakable rumble of a train coming from the south.

"It will pass right down there behind that clump of trees and go through the cut," said the corporal. "Oi wonder wouldn't it be a good plan to take advantage of its noise when it passes to slip through the outposts. They'll be thinkin of the train, and Oi can follow in its wake."

He advanced cautiously to the trees beside the track and waited for the train. Presently the headlight of a locomotive shot out from around a curve. The corporal had forgotten that its light would reveal him to the engineer. He crouched down out of sight with a high beating heart, and none too soon, for had he staid where he was the light would have shone directly on him. He waited while the engine puffed slowly by. It was drawing a long train of mixed passenger, cattle and platform cars, every car crowded with troops.

"They're preparin to give us a brush in earnest. Like enough these are re-enforcements," muttered the corporal.

Ratigan determined to follow the railroad north to Ringold, which he judged to be only a mile distant. The train loaded with Confederate troops having just passed, the guards he might meet would probably not be very suspicious of an enemy. He walked on the track for a short distance, expecting a challenge with every step.

He received one suddenly, just before entering a wood. A man on horseback aimed a carbine at him and gave the customary:

"Who comes thar?"

Ratigan at once threw up his hands, which his challenger could distinctly see, and cried out, "I want ye to take me to Colonel Fitz Hugh."

"What do you want with him?"

"Do ye know him?"

"He commands a regiment in our brigade."

Seeing that the corporal held his hands above his head, the man permitted him to draw near. Once here, Ratigan informed him of the nature of his mission and begged him for Colonel Fitz Hugh's sake to send him to Ringold at once. The vedette was convinced from Ratigan's earnestness that he bore a message of importance, and calling his comrades ordered one of them to dismount. Then, taking the precaution to blindfold the stranger, he mounted him, and placing a horseman on either side of him sent the three clattering toward Ringold. It was not a long distance to the town, but all distances, all periods of waiting, seemed long to the corporal. Was not the terrible event to take place at sunrise? And now it must be near midnight.

"What is the time?" he asked of his conductors.

"Twenty minutes to 11."

"Let's go faster. Colonel Fitz Hugh would be as anxious for me to get on as Oi am meself if he knew me errand."

"All right. Let's light out, Pete."

And Ratigan felt the motion of a gallop in the horse he rode. And now came a "Halt" from a guard and an answer, followed by "Advance and give the countersign." One of the men goes forward for the purpose. Then the party goes on again, but what they pass or where they are going Ratigan knows nothing about. He only knows that they are moving, and that they are not moving fast enough to suit him. Presently they stop, and the corporal can hear one of the men dismount. There is a stroke of a clock evidently from a church spire. He counted, "One, two, three," and on to eleven.

"Dismount."

He lost no time in throwing himself from his horse and was led forward. The air became warmer. He must be in an inclosure. The bandage was taken from his eyes.

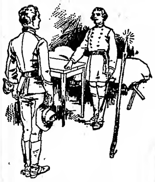
He was standing in a tent lighted by a candle fixed to the end of a stake driven into the ground. There was but one other person present, a Confederate officer. He was a tall, slender young man, with long black hair, a mustache and goatee, and an eye honest, respect inspiring, and with all the gentleness of a woman's.

"Are ye Colonel Fitz Hugh?" asked the corporal, making a salute as if in presence of an officer of his own side.

"I am."

"Oi have a message from yer sister."

Colonel Fitz Hugh turned ashy pale. No one could come to him from her without striking terror into him, for he knew the work in which she was engaged. For months he had lived in dread of her capture. If the messenger had been a citizen or a Confederate soldier, it might not speak so clearly of danger, but coming from a Yankee trooper quick reasoning told him that she had doubtless met with disaster.



"Are ye Colonel Fitz Hugh?"

"Indeed," was all his reply to the corporal's announcement.

"Oi'm sorry to inform ye, sir," said the corporal in a voice which he vainly endeavored to keep steady, "that Miss Fitz Hugh, passin under the name of Elizabeth Baggs"—

Fitz Hugh put his hand on Ratigan's arm and stopped him, while he gathered his faculties to bear what he knew was coming.

"Was pursued by a contemptible cur of a Yankee, who deserves to be hanged for chasin a woman"—

"Yes, yes. Go on."

"Was captured and"—

"O God!"

"Condemned to be shot for a spy tomorrow mornin at sunrise."

Fitz Hugh sunk back on a camp cot and covered his face with his hands. For a few moments the corporal respected his grief by silence, but time was precious, and he soon continued.

"Thinkin ye might exercise some influence to save her, Oi've come to inform ye of the—distressin fact."

The last two words were spoken in a broken voice.

"By whose authority?"

Fitz Hugh rose and stood before the corporal. He had nerved himself for whatever was to follow.

"Colonel Mark Maynard, commanding the —th cavalry brigade."

"Do you mean to tell me," said Fitz Hugh, with a singular, impressive slowness, "that my sister is at the mercy of Mark Maynard?"

"He is charged with her execution."

Colonel Fitz Hugh shuddered. "That man is my Nemesis," he cried in a voice filled with a kind of despair.

"'Tis he that sent me to ye."

"He?"

"The same."

"Does he wish to save my sister?"

"He does."

"Why, then, does he not do so?"

"He can only save her by his own disgrace. Yer sister will not accept the sacrifice."

"A true Fitz Hugh," said the brother proudly.

"Then Miss Fitz Hugh suggested that he might send me to inform ye of the situation, that ye might hev opportunity to use any influence ye would consider wise and honorable to secure a reprieve."

Fitz Hugh thought earnestly with his head bowed, his eyes fixed on a spot on the ground.

"There is nothing that I can do," he said at last. "Threatened retaliation is the only recourse, and that could not be effected under the circumstances without implicating Colonel Maynard."

"Then ye see no way open?" asked the corporal despondently.

"It is impossible for me to act intelligently alone. If I could see Colonel Maynard, perhaps together we might hit upon a plan."

"Would ye meet him between the lines?"

"There is not sufficient time."

"There's five or six hours."

Fitz Hugh stood pondering for a few moments without reply. Then, suddenly starting up, he said:

"Go tell Colonel Maynard that I will meet him as you suggest. Let the point of rendezvous be—let me see—where do you consider a feasible point? You have just come through."

"Oi would name the bank of the creek at a point due west of this."

"How long a time will be required before the meeting can take place? It is now a little after 11."

"It may be an hour; it may be longer. If ye will be there, colonel, at 12 o'clock, we'll meet ye as soon after as possible."

"You will find me there at 12."

"It would be well, colonel, to concert a signal by which each should know the other."

"Suggest one."

"Oi'll doubtless be with Colonel Maynard. Oi'll cry 'Oireland,' and ye can respond"—

"To the rescue."

Colonel Fitz Hugh called to those waiting outside, who had brought in Corporal Ratigan and directed them to blindfold him and take him to the Federal lines, and, if possible, insure his getting through without injury. They were to report the result to him in any event.

Ratigan knew nothing but the gallop of the horse on which he sat, with a handkerchief about his eyes, until the party conducting him drew rein and he was directed to dismount. Then he was asked if he would be escorted to a Union vedette known to be on a road leading around the north end of the ridge or whether he would go alone.

"Oi'll go alone," he said. "If ye go with me, they'll think it a midnight attack."

Starting forward, the corporal trudged over a short distance between him and the vedette. As he drew near he began to sing a few lines from a play popular at the time.

Thim's the boys
What makes a noise,
Is the R'yal artillerie.

"Who comes there?" cried the vedette, cocking his piece as Ratigan came in sight.

"Friend with the countersign, to be sure! Who d'ye suppose?"

"Advance, friend, and give the countersign," called the man. He was a good deal puzzled at hearing the Irish brogue coming from that direction, but it reassured him. He did not have much fear of an enemy unless it were a trap to get him at a disadvantage. Ratigan drew near and whispered, "Carnifax Ferry."

"What are you doing out there?" queried the man.

"Lookin out for trains bringin in troops. One came in half an hour ago loaded."

"You don't mean it! Guess they're getting in re-enforcements."

"I believe ye, me boy."

Ratigan walked on toward the camp till he got out of sight of the vedette. Then he ran till he dropped breathless in Colonel Maynard's tent.

TENNYSON'S FLOWERS.

The Poet Makes Many References to Beautiful Blossoms In His Works.

Tennyson speaks of "a skin as clean and white as privet when it flowers," and truly the privet, with its prim leaves and small, white flowers, looks like a very Puritan for neatness and simplicity. References to the flowers of our gardens, of course, abound, and many will occur at once to the Tennyson reader. The rose and the lily play more than a commonplace part in "Maud," where indeed all the flowers are interested spectators of the drama. Passages such as

A walk of roses ran from door to door,
A walk of lilies crossed it to the bower,

from the "Idylls," might have been written by many others, and bell flowers, though we may be grateful to Tennyson for preserving the old fashioned name "Canterbury bells," are easily paralleled from many poets. Perhaps the beautiful line, "Love, like an Alpine harebell, hung with tears," deserves an especial mention. He has written a poem to the snowdrop, which is styled "February Fair Maid," and it forms a fitting part of his picture of "St. Agnes' Eve," which, as W. E. Henley has pointed out, is so dazzlingly pure in its whiteness and a contrast to Keats' brilliantly colored poem on the same subject.

Of the early spring, with its violets, primroses and crocuses, our poet is never tired and has avowed his especial love for April, being an Elizabethan in this, as in many other things, so that it is surprising to find comparatively little mention of the daffodil. It is hardly to be found anywhere, except in "Maud" and the "Sonnet to the Nineteenth Century," "Here in this roaming moon of daffodil and crocus." Perchance Tennyson felt that it had been so fully celebrated elsewhere as to become hackneyed in spite of all its beauty.—Good Words.

My Wife is Nervous.

Says many a man and too often he is inclined to blame the poor, tired woman who cannot eat or sleep, whose whole life is filled with misery because her blood has become impoverished and her nervous system exhausted. She needs a building up medicine like Hood's Sarsaparilla. A few bottles will enrich and vitalize her blood, tone and strengthen her digestive organs, give her a good appetite, enable her to sleep soundly, banish her nervousness and bring back her smiles. Mr. J. W. Roberson, of Greenfield, Tenn., says: "My wife began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla about three months ago and she is now taking her third bottle. She has been in poor health for fifteen years. Hood's Sarsaparilla is doing her more good than any other medicine she has ever taken. Her appetite is better, she looks better and there has been improvement in every way."

THE prominent Populist leaders of the state, Ignatius Donnelly and Sidney M. Owen, decline to have anything to do with the new silver party scheme.

THE state of North North Dakota appropriates $30,000 to eradicate the cactus from the soil—but not a dollar to eradicate the ignorance from the mind of the youth and rising generation of its public. Comment is unnecessary!

IT has been said that Grover intends to let Lewis Baker out of his job as minister to Nicaragua, and now comes the rumor that Lew has asked for a sixty day leave of absence. That is an easy way to let him down gracefully.

THE Pops do not tumble to the idea of forming a party on the one idea of free silver. That is too narrow-gauged even for the Pops to endure. Atty. Gen. Standish, of North Dakota will be a good bit all alone if he continues to stick to the idea.

THERE is an effort on the part of some Democrats to bring out Grover Cleveland on a gold basis platform—a sort of setting up the golden calf business, as it were. Well, it matters not how they set him up, as a golden calf or any other way—his name is Dennis, all the same.

THE arrival of ex-Congressman Boen, from Washington, last week, revived the rumors floating about that he would be the next Populist candidate for governor of Minnesota. Boen is not doing any talking but is said to be sawing lots of wood. He is no doubt the strongest man they could name and the logical man of the party.

IT has been decided by the powers that be that Gen. Compton's term as Surveyor General of logs and lumber, expired on March 31st and rumor is just now filling his place. Nate Butler, of Barnsville is an aspirant but it is said that Doran is backing P. H. Kerwin for the place, so of course Kerwin will win, hands down.

THE scandulous and wholly uncalled for attack made by the patent outside daily upon the editor of the JOURNAL was worthy the source from which it emanated and carried its own reputation upon its face. When a man gets so low in the scale of humanity as to be capable of indulging in such reckless falsehood he is utterly beneath contempt.

THE press of the state was almost unanimous in its recommendation of David Ramaley for state expert printer, and Bob Dunn, one of the board having the matter of appointment in charge, did all he could to secure the appointment of Mr. Ramaley. The other two, claiming irregularities of some sort on the part of Mr. Ramaley secured the appointment of another person. The charges against Mr. Ramaley have been investigated and proven groundless—as everybody knew they would be. It was only a trumped up excuse to beat Ramaley and the boys who stood by him will remember to get even with those fellows when the proper time comes.

Beet Sugar in Minnesota.

Mr. F. I. Whitney, general passenger agent of the Great Northern railroad, told the editor of the Northwestern Agriculturist last week that he knew of Chicago capital which had been ready to put into a sugar factory in Minnesota, but because it had not yet been actually demonstrated that our farmers could and would raise beets, the investors had been unwilling to come here. In consequence of our unreadiness this sugar factory has jumped clear over Minnesota and gone to a Pacific Coast state.—Northwestern Agriculturist.

Commenting on the above item the Alexandria Post-News says:

"This sounds like error, for many farmers several years ago planted sugar beet seed with good results in crop, and analysis show as large or larger percentage of sugar than was gotten from the California product. Also if Mr. Whitney's company had assured the farmers along its line of road of a market for beets, and had named a fair freight rate on them, the farmers would have buried his Chicago capitalists in beets. If the Agriculturist clipping is fact, then the blame rests with Mr. Whitney and not with the farmers."

WASHINGTON LETTER.

From our Regular Correspondent.

WASHINGTON, March 29, 1895.

If Mr. Cleveland was hunting for something to do to further offend the silver Democrats he certainly found it when he decided that he would not carry out the Wolcott amendment, providing for the appointment of three commissioners by the president to act with those named by congress as representatives of the United States at any international monetary conference in which this government might be invited to participate. First the friends of Mr. Cleveland gave it out that his reason for refusing to appoint the commissioners was that it was specifically stated in the act authorizing their appointment that they were only to take part in a conference called to consider an international ratio and the free coinage of silver, and that no such conference was contemplated by Germany, but later the excuse was amended by saying that Mr. Cleveland had private information to the effect that Germany would not invite the holding of the conference, anyway. It is a fact very well known in Washington that Mr. Cleveland has resented from the first the action of congress in naming two-thirds of the commission, thus putting it out of his power to make a majority of it anti-silver; therefore nobody was much surprised at his refusal to complete it. If he really knew that no conference would be held he would have appointed the commissioners and not have shown his hand. It is contended by some that if a conference is held the six commissioners named by congress can participate regardless of Mr. Cleveland's wishes, as $100,000 was appropriated by congress to pay their expenses, but that is doubtful. If an invitation to take part in a monetary conference is extended to the United States by Germany or any other foreign country it is fair to assume that a commission signed by the president would be the only credentials which would be recognized.

It is the general impression here that Mr. Thurston, the Hawaiian minister, scored at Secretary Gresham's expense when he announced, in advance of any information from his government, his immediate departure for Hawaii. Those who are familiar with the Hawaiian government appear to think it probable that Mr. Thurston and Mr. Hatch, the present Hawaiian minister of foreign affairs, may exchange places. If they do Mr. Thurston would not be human if he did not take advantage of the opportunities that would surely come to him to worry Secretary Gresham. His first step in that direction would most likely be to ask for the recall of Minister Willis.

Ex-Gov. Campbell, of Ohio, who has been classed as a Cleveland man, and who has was certainly a Cleveland man at Chicago convention of 1892 seems to have joined hands with the antis. He was in Washington this week hobnobbing with Senators Gorman, Brice and other anti-Cleveland men, and it is said that these men are laying wires to make Mr. Cleveland's hopes of again becoming the candidate of the democrats dissolve into one of ex-Senator Ingalls' iridescent dreams.

There has probably never before been as many changes the announced or foreshadowed in the short space of a single week in the diplomatic corps at Washington. Without counting the retirement of Minister Thurston there are the following changes: The Spanish minister, who has been notified of the appointment of his successor; the German ambassador, who has received the same information; ditto the Argentine minister, and the Brazilian minister has been notified of his appointment to the bench of the supreme court of Brazil, which, of course, means a new Brazilian minister here.

The application of Debs for a writ of habeas corpus was this week argued before the U. S. Supreme Court, Attorney General Olney taking the negative and Mr. C. S. Darrow, of Chicago, the affirmative. No decision is expected for at least a month, owning to the number of important cases upon which arguments have been made but no decision handed down. Somehow the idea seems to be general that the application of Debs will be denied.

Nothing new has this week been made public concerning the various diplomatic muddles, but there has been a communication received from Spain, and it is said in administration circles to have been satisfactory as far as it went, but from what can be learned it did not go very far. The cabinet is said to be divided on the question of making the eagle do a little screaming at England on behalf of Nicaragua and Venezuela and incidentally of the democratic party, and the screaming has not been done, although there is enough for it to be done.

BLOOD PURIFIERS.

When Spring breezes began to blow, our good old grandmothers used to prepare for us doses of sulphur and molasses, and other simple mixtures, to "purify the blood." upon the theory that heavy winter diet of pork and potatoes and cabbage and corned beef had somehow filled our veins with impurities which needed to be driven out. Our grandfathers, having considerable of the "old Adam," seemed to prefer whisky and tansy to the remedies used by their wives survives even to this day. At a later day, came the army of patent medicine "purifier" which were almost warranted to give one a supply of blood superior in every respect to that furnished by nature. Now, personal cleanliness and a careful selection of food are taking the places of medication, as they ought to do and we are being freed from the swallowing of nauseous decoctions. In additions to plentiful bathing and varied food, one of the best prescriptions for a debilitated condition is a pleasure trip to one of the thousand health resort of our great country. Ninety-nine times out of a hundred these resting-places must be reached by a railroad journey, and the first step is to say to your ticket agent, when you visit his office, that you want your ticket via the Burlington Route. If he cannot supply you with both ticket and information, write to W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul, Minn.

Euclid Items.

Dr. Chapin, daughter Nellie and son Harry returned home last Friday from a three week's pleasure trip through Michigan and Wisconsin. They were accompanied by Miss Lena Coon, of Fond du Lac Wisconsin, who intends to make her home in Euclid.

Miss Della Hancock, who has been attending the Normal School at Moorhead, during the past winter, returned home Saturday last.

Ole Anderson and E. C. Murney drove to Crookston Saturday.

Mrs. Louis Hanse lies at the point of death at her home a few miles east of here.

Mrs. H. C. Misner has been rapidly improving in health the past few days, and we hope to see her about again in a short time.

Geese are more plentiful in this vicinity this spring than they have been for many seasons past.

Owing to the fine weather we are enjoying at present, many of the farmers have commenced seeding.

Judging from the demand for seed a large quantity of flax will be sown in this community this spring.

C. Keely & son, P. C. drove to Grand Forks Tuesday.

L. L. C. Brooks of St. Paul arrived in town Tuesday morning. He is here looking after business interest at the Keystone farm.

The rapidity with which croup develops calls for instant treatment; and yet few households are prepared for its visits. An admirable remedy for this disease is Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. It has saved hundreds of lives and should be in every home where there are young children.

PERILS OF A MESMERIC EYE.

They Drove a Respectable, Clean Shaved Lawyer Into Whiskers.

A well known lawyer who has always takes considerable pride in the classic mold of his clean shaven face appeared in the county court rooms recently with a well developed growth of very unbecoming beard. Every friend that he met wanted to know why he didn't get shaved, and finally he corralled half a dozen of them in a corner and told them the reason.

He had never learned the art of shaving himself and had always patronized one barber. Not long ago the barber dropped into the habit of telling him that he (the lawyer) had a mesmeric eye. The lawyer didn't mind much what his barber thought of his eye so long as he shaved him satisfactorily. But having discovered that the lawyer's eye was mesmeric the barber went a step further and once in awhile, after making a slip with the razor, would explain that it was because he was mesmerized, so that he did not know what he was about. Matters went on this way for a week or so, the barber insisting that he was mesmerized every time the lawyer looked squarely at him, and the lawyer took it for granted that the mesmerism business was a dodge to excuse the occasional cuts from the razor.

A different aspect was put to the case, however, the last time the barber shaved his lawyer customer. Leaning over him after he had finished, he asked if the lawyer thought a man would be excusable for cutting the throat of one who mesmerized him. The lawyer said he certainly would not be excusable and got out of the chair as quickly as possible. He learned afterward that the barber had developed into a perfect crank on the subject of mesmerism, and nothing will persuade him that he did not have a very narrow escape. He will probably go to another barber some time, but at present his nerves are so shaken by the occurrence that he prefers to wear an unbecoming beard to sitting down in any barber chair.—Chicago Tribune.

THE EARTH IS RUNNING SLOW.

But the Scientists Need Not Alarm One Seriously Yet.

Lord Kelvin estimates that the "running slow" of the earth in its daily rotation round its axis amounts to 22 seconds per century.

The main cause of this retardation is the friction caused by the tides, which act as a brake, the action of which has been calculated by this eminent physicist to be equal to a weight of 4,000,000 tons applied on the equator.

Other causes have also to be taken into account—as, for example, the increase in the size of the earth, due to the falling on it of meteoric dust, which, if deposited at the rate of one foot in 4,000 years, would produce the observed retardation by itself.

Such a phenomenon as the annual growth and melting of snow and ice at the poles is introducing irregularities into the problem, the growth at the poles, by abstracting water from the other parts of the ocean, accelerating the earth's motion, and the melting, by restoring the water, retarding it.

Against the retarding forces there has to be taken into account a probable acceleration, due to the gradual sinking of the earth by cooling, but this Lord Kelvin believes to be very small—perhaps not more than one six-thousandth part of the retardation due to tidal friction.

Professor Newcomb has declared from astronomical considerations that the earth went slow and lost seven seconds between 1850 and 1862, and then went fast and gained eight seconds between 1862 and 1872, changes of rate explicable by possible changes in the earth's shape, so slight as to be quite undiscoverable in astronomical observations.—Chicago Times.

English Accents.

The great French actor Febvre has an ambition or a dream that some day the stage of every country will speak the language of his country with a perfect accent and an academic unity. "It is that very thing, the variety of accents, that makes English so puzzling to a foreigner. Go into any of the first class comedy theaters in London. An actor enters. He speaks one English. Another walks on the stage. He speaks a second species. A third and a fourth have a third and a fourth variety. It is just as though, at the Comedie Francaise, one role were to be played by a Marseillais, another by a Bordelais, a third by a Breton, each with his individual accent. A stranger would find it difficult to pose himself, to take his bearings. On one of my visits to London I was talking with the Prince of Wales. 'By the way, Febvre,' said he suddenly, 'how do you get along with English?' 'Ah, monseigneur,' I replied, 'the English I learned in Paris does not pass beyond the fortifications and is only spoken between Frenchmen!'"—Philadelphia Ledger.

Out of Place.

"What," asked the king in the play, "are those Roman citizens doing over there?"

"Your majesty," rejoined the herald, "they are believed to be forming a plot."

"Tell them they mustn't," commanded the monarch, with asperity, not unmingled with ennui. "Admonish them that they are throwing their time away. Plots have no place in this kind of drama."

With which the king turned to the audience and sang with fine effect, "Her Auburn Tresses Wouldn't Stay In Curl."—Detroit Tribune.

A Realistic Dream.

"Taking the other day, as a brief respite from labor, a little nap at my desk," said a man, 'I dreamed that I was smoking, and that I had swallowed a lot of smoke. I awoke coughing. Wasn't that kind of curious?"—New York Sun.

Angus, March 29, 1895.

ED. JOURNAL, Dear Sir:—

Reports have been circulated in Crookston papers to the effect that Mr. Thos. Edgar complained of the treatment he received from his family. Now upon a personal investigation I have found the report untrue, although Mr. Edgar may have made a complaint to that effect for which he is not responsible. His family has been very kind to him during his present affliction and he has received no treatment from his children of which a complaint could be made. Reporters should be careful about making such reports as they are of great importance and are brought before the public in the press to a large extent. Any man with ordinary intelligence knowing Mr. Edgar to be mentally deranged would not rely on or make public any report that he might make that would cause the public to believe that his family were in any way unkind to him.

Yours respectfully,
F. R. STEVENS.

WHAT CONSTITURES A STATE?

True Citizenship.

"Wisdom and knowledge shall be the stability of the times.—"Isaiah 33:6.

What is the state? Literally it is that which stands. Men come and go but the state endures. How it touches the heart to think of the men who built themselves into the civil fabric of this country between the years '60 and '80! How few of the "Boys in Blue" met at the last national encampment! How many inquiries for old comrades were answered: "Oh, he is gone!" Where is Lincoln and his cabinet, or the great statesmen, Sumner and Wilson: or the war governors, Andrew Buckingham, Morton, Curtin and Morgan! And yet the state stands. It stands because they and such as they built themselves into it as living stones.

For what does the nation stand? It should stand for God. The functions of civil government are divinely given. "By him kings reign and princes decree justice." The right of government is the right of the state; but no man nor collection of men can assume that right. It makes no difference whether in England or America; whether under Gladstone or Salisbury or Roseberry; whether under Republicans, Democrats or Populists: In other words, it makes no difference what form of government—what its perfection or faults—when you have reached its chief man, its executive, its power, you have reached a man whose functions came from God.

When a little boy I heard Hon. Geo. S. Boutwell say that one night President Lincoln's cabinet was arging him to send forth the emancipation proclamation at once. He replied: "After the next victory on the field I will let them have it." The hand of God gave the victory. No mere man or collection of men signed that proclamation.

What makes the state permanent? Every four years a grand ordeal is borne by the American people. Several great parties confront each other at the ballot box. For a while the situation seems almost exasperating. It is like lifting a cup to lips trembling with thirst, only to dash it down utterly broken. How have the people responded? Has there been violence and confusion? No. The defeated, calmly and with dignity, submitted. England—that jealous nation—said at the lips of one of her greatest statesmen, after the election a few years ago: "By that last test the American people have shown a patriotic restraint worthy the imitation of the world."

Whence this power? The greatest intellectual nation of history had it not; the greatest law making people failed; the greatest maritime power was unsuccessful.

This permanence and character rests upon a triple basis—virtue, intelligence and political equality, with no machinery but a pulpit, a printing press and a teacher's desk. How carefully these should be guarded! How sacred they are! Far away in an eastern desert, under the shadow of a trembling mountain whose top burned with fire, an ancient people received a law written upon tables of stone. The stones have crumbled but the law remains, because it is written upon the hearts of the people. Search where you will, it is impossible to explain the permanence of the state or the manliness of the American people except in a devout regard for the laws of Sinai and the Cross of Calvary.

What is the relation of the Citizen to the State? The first duty that the citizen owes to the State is good citizenship. No theory of government avails without this. In order to be a good citizen, a man must know the laws and obey them, and that too, because the laws represent the government of God among men. The bad citizens of the country today make the government insecure, where it is insecure.

To be a good citizen a man must be a worker, a producer of some kind, whether by brain or brawn. A man who opens or patronizes a pit of vice—be it under the name of "hall," "parlor" or "saloon"—or panders to the lower passions of his fellow men is not a good citizen. He is rather a leech, a parasite.

A good citizen willingly pays taxes. To care for the functions of government costs something. "Render, therefore, to all their dues, tribute to whom tribute and honor to whom honor."

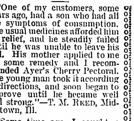
A good citizen earnestly promotes religion. Says Carlyle, "The most important thing about a man is his religion," and again, "No government ever amounted to anything without it.

A good citizen encourages education. From the hour when Themistocles led the intelligent Grecian at Salamis to the day when Von Moltke marshalled the trained Germans against France, history has shown that education is the element for the battle field as well as for the legislative hall.

A good citizen is a positive temperance man. President Lincoln once called for 75,000 men to stand by him in the hour of our Country's peril. Young men' the demon of the whisky-shop in our country calls for 75,000 men every nine months for drunkards' graves.

Some of you are just entering upon the duties of citizenship, show to the world that your country gives its rewards not for indolence but for industry.

The time may come when good citizenship will demand your lives: be ready with them! We have, however, enough patriots in times of war; we need intelligent patriots in times of peace.



AYER'S
Cherry Pectoral
SAVED HIS LIFE

So says Mr. T. M. Reed, a highly-respected Merchant of Middletown, Ill., of a Young Man who was supposed to be in Consumption.

"One of my customers, some years ago, had a son who had all the symptoms of consumption. The usual medicines afforded him no relief, and he steadily failed until he was unable to leave his bed. His mother applied to me for some remedy and I recommended Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. The young man took it according to directions, and soon began to improve until he became well and strong."—T. M. REED, Middletown, Ill.

"Some time ago, I caught a severe cold, my throat and lungs were badly inflamed, and I had a terrible cough. It was supposed that I was a victim of consumption, and my friends had little hope of recovery. But I bought a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, took it, and was entirely cured. No doubt, it saved my life."—I. JONES, Emerts Cove, Tenn.

Those——Pimples

Are tell-tale symptoms that your blood is not right—full of impurities, causing a sluggish and unsightly complexion. A few bottles of S. S. S. will remove all foreign and impure matter, cleanse the blood thoroughly, and give a clear and rosy complexion. It is most effectual, and entirely harmless.

Chas. Heaton, 73 Laurel Street, Phila., says: "I have had for years a humor in my blood which made me dread to shave, as small boils or pimples would be cut, thus causing shaving to be a great annoyance. After taking three bottles my face is all clear and smooth as it should be—appetite splendid, sleep well and feel like running a foot race all for the use of S. S. S."

Farmers are getting down to business and if this kind of weather holds they will be seeding in earnest all along the line by next week.

A special on the Northern Pacific on Sunday afternoon brought a number of the receivers of the road who are out on a tour of inspection.

Mrs. E. H. Spendley went to Dakota this week accompanied by her little daughter. It is said that Mrs. S. will teach in Nelson county this summer.

Monday was a bright, beautiful day and the voters were about the streets as plentiful and as busy as bees. Lots of good, solid, quiet work was done and the two candidates for mayor seemed to be running about neck and neck all day as near as could be sized up.

Senator Davis' article in the March number of the North American Review is answered in the April number of that periodical by Senator Gray of Delaware, who eloquently upholds the foreign policy of the present administration. Senator Grays' article is entitled "Two Years of American Diplomacy."

"Does Fire Insurance Cost Too Much?" is the question asked by George U. Crocker Treasurer of the Northern railroad, who, in the North American Review brings to bear a practical insight and experience upon a topic in which millions of people in the United States are vitally concerned.

In an article entitled "A Last Tribute" Ex-speaker Reed in the North American Review for April, turns the Republican search light of criticism on the most important measures of the Fifty-third Congress, and expresses his opinion of them, dealing particularly with the question of financial legislation.

Mrs. J. R. Barb and children reached their destination in safety last week. They found green grass in Colorado and gardens being planted, and farmers well along with their seeding. They have had a big snow there since, however. J. R. expects to go there next week.

Among the short articles published in the North American Review for April are "Hypnotism and Justice." by H. Merriman Steele; "The Conditions of Gold Production," by F. A. Rickard; "A Word About the New Pulpit," by the Rev. C. Ernest Smith, and "The Evolution of the Irish Farmer," by George H. Bassett.

Election day was one of the finest in the land and a great deal of interest was manifested from the opening of the polls to the closing thereof. This was very much better than it would have been with only one ticket in the field which would have afforded no special object for voters to turn out.

On Tuesday evening, as soon as the results were known a large crowd of enthusiastic voters gathered in front of the residence of the new mayor elect, John R. McKinnon, who appeared in response to the call and made a brief address and then the crowd dispersed to celebrate the event after their own fashion.

The JOURNAL noticed the arrival of Harry Greenlee in the city last week, and later events prove that he was here for a special purpose—matrimony. He met a young lady here who had arrived on a train and together they went over to Grand Forks where they were united for life. They will go out on Harry's claim at Duck Lake and begin housekeeping.

On Wednesday morning a fellow called at Saake's jewelry store and asked to see some rings. Saake handed out the ring tray, when the fellow grabbed one and attempted to skip out, but Saake caught on to him too quick and compelled him to let up on the ring and then he was permitted to go. Saake don't like to do business on long-time deals like that.

J. L. Bulley was down from Erskine last week shaking hands with his numerous friends in this neck of the woods. To a JOURNAL man he said: "That villianous attack upon you in the Tribune was a lie out of whole cloth and I am going up and tell him so. He is a pretty specimen to set himself up as a leader when he makes such scandalous attacks upon the Republican party!"

The English Hackney, the picture of which, together with one of his colts, appears elsewhere in this issue, is the first one of the breed ever brought to Polk county. These animals are all fine, showy creatures making the finest kind of driving horses. In large cities they are esteemed the finest coach horses to be had and always bring long prices. Farmers and all interested in raising good driving horses should see Young Phenomenon, L. I. Benoit's English Hackney. Good judges have pronounced him to be the handsomest horse in Polk county.

John R. McKinnon, Crookston's new mayor-elect is one of the old settlers and one of her most enterprising citizens. A successful business man, what money he has made in the city he has put where it can be taxed for the common good of all. Ever alive to the best interests of Crookston he will be a mayor who will carefully look after the best interests of the city and the JOURNAL predicts for him as successful an administration as it is possible for any man to give it. He himself ran a good clean campaign and whatever of dirty work may have been done by some of his mugwump supporters was not by his sanction and was not endorsed by him. Early in the campaign we heard him say that if he won the fight it would be, so far as he was concerned upon his merits and upon no other grounds.

It may save you time and money to be informed that, when you need a blood-purifier, Ayer's Sarsaparilla is the kind most in favor with the medical profession. It is the standard and, as such, the only blood-purifier admitted at the Chicago World's Fair.

No Cause of Action.

U. S. Marshall Shortall brought one James Conley before Judge C. O. Christianson on Saturday charged with forgery. It was alleged that he signed another man's name to a money order for $16 and obtained the money. It is said that a short time since a deputy sheriff tried to arrest Conley who drew a revolver and bluffed the officer. Shortall undertook the case and came upon his man while he was in bed and brought him in. It was proved that the order in question was for some furs in which Conley had an equal interest with the other man and he was released.

Culpable Carelessness.

Last Thursday noon, when T. A. Harris was turning the corner of Fletcher and Main streets with the Archibault building, a small boy about six years old was standing by the sidewalk looking on, when a team came along on Main street, and in attempting to turn out of the road, so as to pass the building one of the horses struck the boy and knocked him down; the driver, instead of stopping until the boy could get out of the way, deliberately drove right over him with both wheels of the wagon and right along about his business, not even getting out to see whether the boy was seriously hurt or not. Fortunately he did not have a lumber wagon and the boy, though bruised some was not seriously hurt. There were two or three men in the wagon but none seemed to be much concerned. Such exhibitions of heartlessness are rare, and it is fortunate for humanity that such is the case.

WHITTIER'S SECRET.

THE TRUE STORY OF HIS COURTSHIP OF CORNELIA RUSS.

Though She Did Not Marry Him, She Remained Single and Never Told—A Love Episode In the Poet's Life That Made a Deep Impression Upon Him.

The residence of 18 months in Hartford introduced him to a vigorous antislavery circle of higher culture and a more delicate refinement than any he had known, and within that circle incarnated in a most lovely woman he was to find his fate.

Among the friends the biographer has mentioned Judge Russ, a man well known in that day for brilliant parts and a handsome person. The family was distinguished for beauty and brightness. Of those members whom Whittier knew, Mary, the oldest, married Silas E. Burrowes. Mrs. Burrowes died of consumption in New York in 1841, at the age of 34. There survived only an unmarried daughter, Cornelia, and one son, Charles James Russ, who 20 years later was a prominent lawyer in Hartford.

Cornelia, the youngest child, born in 1814, was but 17 years old when she parted from Whittier in 1831. He was 24. The strong antislavery zeal of the family threw the two young people much together, and the clear brain and tender heart of the poet yielded to very uncommon charms. One who saw her during the last year of her life describes her in this way:

"At 28 Cornelia was a most beautiful woman. She had dark blue eyes, like pansies, with long, dark lashes, black hair and the most exquisite color. If she was like the rest of her family, she was a very brilliant woman."

Judge Russ, who was a member of congress in 1820, had died in 1832. Of this Whittier probably heard through his friend Law, but that he ever heard of the death of Mary Burrowes or Cornelia there is no evidence. When he was writing his letter of sympathy to the friends of Lucy Hooper, Cornelia was lying on her deathbed. She had nursed her sister through her fatal illness, had imbibed the poison and followed her in the April of 1842.

The poem called "Memories," to which Whittier attributed a special significance, was written during Cornelia's last illness. He thinks of her as still bright and living, and when in 1888 he desired the poem to be placed at the head of his "Subjective" verse, his heart was still true to her, but gave no token that he knew hers had ceased to beat.

After Cornelia's death her papers passed into the hands of the only surviving member of her family, Charles James Russ, who died in 1861. At that time her private letters came into the hands of his widow, who destroyed most of them, but kept from pure love of the poet the precious pages in which Whittier had offered himself to her kinswoman. I have not myself read the letter, which is still in existence, but one who has read it, the present possessor, writes me as follows: "The letter was short, simple and manly, as you would know. He evidently expected to call next day and learn his fate." Another who has seen the letter writes: "It was somewhat stiff—such a letter as a shy Quaker lad would be likely to write, for that he was in spite of his genius. He begged her, if she felt unable to return his affection, to keep his secret, for he said, 'My respect and affection for you are so great that I could not survive the mortification, if your refusal were known.'"

Cornelia Russ was sought in marriage by several distinguished persons, but she died unmarried, and she kept Whittier's secret. His poem suggests that the stern creed of Calvin held them apart—a thing very likely to happen in Connecticut half a century ago, but if he had known that she had changed her early connections for the more liberal associations of the Church of England he would have seen yet more distinctly that "shadow of himself in her," of which the poem speaks.

Those who are familiar with "Memories" will recall the "hazel eyes" and "light brown hair" which it commemorates, and fancy perhaps that there is some mistake. It is not likely that Whittier forgot the color of Cornelia's eyes or hair. In some effusive moment he had shown the poem to James T. Field and Edwin P. Whipple. In 1850, when Cornelia had been dead eight years, they wished to publish it, and he was very reluctant. He had not outgrown his early passion, and before it was printed undoubtedly changed a few descriptive words to screen the truth, it may be from Cornelia herself. She never saw it, but I think he died believing that she had.

Rumors of this story reached me long ago, but I would not print a mere surmise and by long and devious ways—leading through probate offices and town registers, through church records and private papers, in a varied correspondence that has occupied two months, have I followed the story as I tell it.—Springfield Republican.

Gently Said.

"Really, Mr. Stalate," she persisted, "you have given me four hours of your time this evening."

"Why—er—upon my word! So I have. The hours pass like minutes when I am with you."

"You were telling me that since your promotion your time is valuable."

"Yes."

"Well, papa doesn't allow me to receive expensive presents from young men."—Washington Star.

Spotted.

Mr. Lightweight (airily, to conductor)—I wonder what that shabby old codger finds so attractive in this direction. He's been eying me for ten minutes.

Conductor (thoughtfully)—I guess he's wondering how you happen to be traveling on a pass. He's the president of the road.—New York Advertiser.

The Outlook For the Irish Farmer.

The improved position of the Irish farmer should presently bring him to the door of the British Government on an errand hitherto undreamed of during the period of struggle and hardship, depressed times and uncertainty of tenure, he had enough to do to live. Now that he is "rooted in the soil," it will not take him long to discover that he that he has a claim on the Education Fund.

Considering what is done by the United States Government to add to facilities for the study of agricultural science, it will appear almost incredible that the English Government does nothing in Ireland in a like direction. From 1849 down to the seventies the Queen's Colleges at Cork, Galway and Belfast had land attached for practical demonstration in agriculture. It was given up in each case. I presume, owing to lack of appreciation on the part of the farming classes.—From "Evolution of the Irish farmer," by George Henry Bassett in North American Review for April.

SLANDER.

'Twas but a breath—
And yet a woman's fair name wilted,
And friends once warm grew cold and stilted,
And life was worse than death.

One venomed word,
That struck its coward, poisoned blow,
In craven whispers hushed and low,
And yet the wide world heard.

'Twas but one whisper—one
That muttered low for very shame,
That thing the slanderer dare not name,
And yet its work was done.

A hint so light,
And yet so mighty in its power,
A human soul in one short hour
Lies crushed beneath its blight.

MYSTIFIED AUTHORS.

Father Prout Made It His Business to Hoax Notable Characters.

Authors have often mystified the public, but a man who made a business of mystifying professional writers is a notable character. Such a one, however, was the Rev Francis Mahony, better known as "Father Prout." His favorite trick was to take a well known and popular poem, translate it into another language, boldly assert that in its new form it possessed great antiquity and charge the author with having stolen it. This trick he played on more than one noted author during the early days of the present century, and each was sorely puzzled to explain the identity of the poem which he knew to be his own with that in a foreign language.

Prout translated Moore's "Go Where Glory Waits Thee" into excellent French verse, attributed it to Mme. La Comtesse de Chateaubriand and charged Moore with having stolen it bodily. The song, "Lesbia Hath a Beaming Eye," he rendered into choice Latin and claimed it as a youthful production of his own, which he had once shown to Moore. Another of Prout's achievements was the translation of Wolfe's "Burial of Sir John Moore" into French, claiming, at the same time, that the lines were written by Colonel de Beaumanois, who was killed at Pondicherry in 1749.

Not satisfied with this, he proceeded further and translated the lines into German verse and stoutly declared that, while Wolfe had stolen from the French poet, the latter had in turn pilfered from the German, the latter poem having, as he stated, been written to commemorate the death and burial of the Swedish General Toisteneon, who was killed at the siege of Dantzic. Poor Wolfe was dumfounded at seeing his popularity disappear and was not much comforted when the hoax was discovered.—Philadelphia Press.

Useful Parrots.

It has hitherto been customary to fritter away the intellectual force of parrots by merely teaching them to say "Pretty Poll" and things of that sort, but the municipal authorities of a French town have instituted what it is to be hoped will become a general reform.

The poor box at the town hall, it seems, had for a long time been in a condition discreditable to the more prosperous of the inhabitants. To remind them of their duty toward their poorer neighbors a parrot was purchased, which was installed close to the box and trained to cry, "For the poor, if you please!"

The result, it appears, has been highly satisfactory, pence and silver coin having been freely given in response to the bird's appeal.

The idea is capable of being applied in a variety of ways. Parrots might be used, for example, to warn passersby of the proximity of wet paint on fences or shop fronts, or to remind people on entering a house to wipe their feet.

In fact, parrots might be made really useful members of society.—Youth's Companion.

Electric Freak In a Church.

Recently there was an eclipse of the electric light at Elm Road Baptist chapel, Southsea, and, curiously enough, the pastor had chosen for his texts, Proverbs lxxiv, 20, "The candle of the wicked shall be put out," and Psalm xvii, 28, "For thou wilt light my candle; the Lord my God will enlighten my darkness," a combination rather cruel to the electric light, for when the lights went out some of the congregation went out also and obtained candles and lamps, whereupon service proceeded. The pastor could not conveniently change his texts in consequence of what had happened, and he may have been prepared for the general titter which followed their announcement. Lately a somewhat similar case occurred in an American church, and the amusement was heightened by the notion of a deacon who absentmindedly lighted a match and applied it to one of the electric lights.—London Lightning.

SPEED ON RAILWAYS.

THE FLIERS ON AMERICAN, GERMAN AND ENGLISH LINES.

Curves and Grade Crossings the Great Drawbacks In This Country—Limited Trains Do Not Pay Expenses, but They Benefit the Service In Other Ways.

The writer broached the subject of fast trains recently to one of the shrewdest civil engineers employed on one of the roads entering Washington. This employee has made railroading a life study, has inspected the railroads of Europe and speaks by the card. He said:

"If our railroads could spare the money to elevate their tracks in cities and at crossings, to say nothing of completing the work of straightening out curves, now going on, I, for one, will predict that we can make an average of 50 miles an hour between New York and Chicago. I say this with the Alleghany mountains almost staring me in the face. We might lose time going up that range, but engineers, as a rule, like to coast, and wouldn't they slide down the other side with a roadbed minus curves and grade crossings! In the matter of cost in making improvements, few people are aware of the expense attached thereto. In round numbers our road 'blew' in fully $5,000,000 in the latter part of 1893 and the beginning of 1893. That was before the financial depression set in. We are now resting on our oars. We cut one curve over a mile long, and the work cost us fully $500,000. Other roads have been doing likewise, and with the return of a prosperous period we will surprise the world, and especially the English, with the average speed our trains will attain.

"Many people will be surprised to learn that Germany and not this country or England furnishes the fastest train in the world. The United States comes second and England third. The German train runs from Berlin to Hamburg, a distance of 178 miles, in 204 minutes, an average outside speed—that is, not counting stops, of over 52 miles an hour. The Empire State express on the New York Central road runs from New York to Buffalo, a distance of 440 miles, in 520 minutes, and its outside speed average is nearly 51 miles an hour. The fastest English train, that comes third on the list, is called the 'west coast flier' and runs from London to Edinburgh, a distance of 400 miles, at an average outside speed of 50 miles an hour.

"The farther we go west the slower the train service becomes, a thing not looked for on account of the miles and miles of track traversing prairie land. The Burlington road's best train averages about 36 miles an hour. That on the Milwaukee road, the limited, can only reach an average of 84 miles an hour. The Denver limited, on the Northwestern road, has to hustle to score an average gait of 29 miles an hour.

"Very few of the fast limited trains in this country pay for the expense of running them, and it is an open secret that the limited between this city and New York, the limited between New York and Chicago and the Empire State express between New York and Buffalo and the Chicago limited on the New York Central road cost their respective roads a good deal more than they bring in, but they are great advertisers for their respective roads.

"The advantages of fast train service on well built and well equipped railroads are not confined to the carrying of passengers swiftly from one point to another. They are felt all through the operating department of a road and exercise an important disciplinary influence. The running of such extraordinary fast trains as the Congressional limited and the Empire State express has had a wonderful effect in increasing the vigilance and efficiency of all the trainhands. The schedules on which such trains are run require the most arbitrary enforcement, and they consequently keep the men all along the line traversed constantly on the alert. Each man is made to feel his full share of the burden of responsibility, and the never ceasing admonition to 'watch for the flier' reduces to a minimum personal inclinations to be slack or neglectful. The telegraph operators have a suspension of 30 days staring them in the face for the slightest delay to the limited, and similar penalties are imposed on other employees.

"Besides this stimulus to duty the fast trains serve as an incentive to the men to strive for promotion. Conductors, engineers, firemen and other hands on the limited get more pay than do the men employed on the trains of subordinate grade. That the 'flier,' in its generic sense, is actually an improving influence in railroading is evidenced by the remarkable careers of the Congressional, the Royal Blue and the Empire State express. These are the fastest trains in this country and have been running several years back, and, with one unimportant exception, have met with no mishap. These trains pass through year after year without a single mishap, and I believe it is all from the discipline put upon the employees by the fast service. The men take a pride in the fast trains."—Washington Star.

Churning.

Among the Arabs a practice from time immemorial has prevailed of churning by placing the milk in leather skins which were shaken or beaten until the butter came. The Huns did their churning by tying a bag of milk to a short lariat, the other end of which was fastened to the saddle. The horse was put at a brisk gallop, and after a round of some miles the churning was considered to be accomplished.

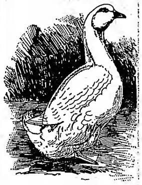
VARIETIES OF DUCKS.

Difference Between the Rouens, the Pekings and the Aylesburys.

There are three varieties of ducks that are kept for market. The others are mainly kept for their ornamental qualities. These are the Rouens, so called because they came originally from the district about Rouen, France; the Aylesbury, from Aylesbury, England, and the Pekings, first imported a few years ago from Peking.

The Rouens are exact counterparts in color of the common wild mallard of America and no doubt descended from this variety, though the long time that has elapsed since they were first domesticated has increased their size and deprived them of their power of long flight. The Pekings and Aylesbury are pure white, or nearly so. The Aylesbury are pure white, while the Pekings have a creamy under color when the feathers are lifted up. There are very few pure Aylesburys to be found in this country, as most of them have been crossed with Pekings to increase their size. They are distinguished by the color of their shanks and feet, which are a light orange, and their bills, which are pinkish white, while the shanks of the Peking are orange color, with a reddish tinge, and their bills are pure yellow.



PRIZE PEKING DRAKE.

Between these three varieties there is not much choice, as they do not differ greatly in weight or hardiness. The Pekings are the better layers, but are not so much in favor with market men on account of the numerous pinfeathers which they have at all times, making them hard to dress nicely.

Peking ducks have been known to produce 200 eggs in a year, but the average is nearer 150. Well grown specimens of either of these three breeds will weigh ten pounds, but they must be forced from the first to reach this weight.

WINTER LAYERS.

They Must Be Hatched by March 1 at the Latest.

If pullets for winter laying are wanted, they must be hatched by the 1st of March at the latest and kept growing from the time they are out of the shell till they have attained full size. If a chick is allowed to stop growing for a single day, if it ever gets chilled enough to be drawn up by the cold, or if it is allowed to go hungry for the space of half a day, that chick will not catch up what it has lost for days or weeks, and the date of its maturity will be delayed out of all proportion to the cause of the delay seemingly.

A knowledge of this fact emphasizes the importance of taking every care of the young chicks. They must not be fed in any haphazard way. If they are not given the very best of care, they may survive, for a chick with a good constitution will stand a great deal of neglect and still live to a good old age, but it will not mature as quickly as it should, and we believe it will never be as good a bird as one that has been well cared for from the first. The poultry raiser will begin at once to prepare for the hatching season, and as fast as hens get broody will set them to work, and by the time the spring opens he will have a good supply of chicks ready to take advantage of the growing season and well on toward maturity before the oppressively hot weather begins.

All this may seem to be a great deal of trouble, and it is. We have found it just as well to have our chicks hatched in April and look to 2-year-old hens for winter eggs, not expecting any results from the pullets until the weather begins to moderate in the spring.

An Apostrophe to Fowls.

Ornithology is admittedly the first of all the sciences and arts studied by the mob. From the barn door fowl, from the back garden rooster to the elegantly plumed pheasant, caged in stylish comfort, the birds of domestic use are of perpetual interest. Cooks and hens are birds of such vast usefulness that they have of the whole animal creation been more than any other species talked about, written about and sung about. As a matter of fact, birds receive quite a disproportionate amount of attention. Trusting to the freedom from danger conferred by the power of flight, most birds have no need to lurk hidden in dens or to slink from place to place. The beauty of their plumage and the grace of their form have always made birds attractive to the eye. Bird literature far surpasses in quantity and quality the books written about anything else. Birds made their appearance in the earliest written records of the human race, and the painter's brush was employed on them before any other animal.

Will Guineas Cross?

A few years ago I had a common speckled guinea hen in a pen with a Black Langshan cock, says a Kansas farmer. The guinea was laying, and I set four eggs from her and hatched out three little black guineas. The little things bred after the guinea in every particular save as to color. Their shape, bottom of their feet and voice—in fact, every characteristic was distinctively that of the guinea fowl, but they were solidly black, like their father. Though apparently healthy and robust, they only lived a few days.

MASSAGE FOR BLACK EYES.

Better Than Paint and Beefsteak For Obliterating Evidence of Fistic Encounters.

Those who make a business of obliterating evidence of fistic encounters in the shape of black eyes by painting the damaged optics no longer enjoy a monopoly of such business. This I was told by a pugilistic acquaintance whose experience entitles him to be regarded as an authority on the subject.

"Massage treatment of the region affected," he said, "will beat paint and raw beefsteak all hollow. But it should be applied immediately after the injury is received in order to prove thoroughly efficacious. It does not require an expert to do it. All that is necessary is to move the fingers rapidly and firmly over the bruised surface and to keep it up until the last vestige of discoloration has disappeared. The explanation is easy. Where the blow has been received the blood becomes congested. It is the clots of blood showing through the transparent skin that produces the black effect. The pressure of the fingers gradually loosens the clotted blood, which passes off into the general currents of circulation, and fresh and properly colored blood takes its place."

However, as a rule, the professional "pug" does not bother himself about accelerating the disappearance of a black eye. It is a sign which proclaims the fact that its proprietor has recently filled an engagement, and as such he is an object of envy to his less fortunate brethren. It is the man about town, whose overindulgence occasionally causes him to forget that discretion is the better part of valor, who is apt to profit most by the knowledge that massage, promptly applied, will remove the signs of mourning from an eye that has been in violent contact with some other fellow's fist, and thus obviate the necessity of inventing a story to account for it, which, however ingenious, will be sneered at by skeptical and incredulous acquaintances, some of whom may have "been there themselves."—New York Herald.

KIPLING'S KIND ACT.

A Story About the Famous Author That Is Not Unpleasant.

It has become the fashion of literary paragraphers to print whatever stories of a disagreeble nature concerning Rudyard Kipling they can hear or find. Incidents showing the other side of the man—the true side, in fact—are rare, but that this wonderful author is not quite the literary barbarian which he is so generally made out to be finds hat stronger evidence in a little story which I heard quite recently.

Not long ago an ambitious young writer composed his first story. He was rather skeptical of its merit, and being a great reader and admirer of Kipling's work determined to send his literary firstborn to Kipling for criticism. His friends tried to dissuade him from the idea, telling him that he would never see his story again. But his faith in his favorite author was strong, and the story went to Kipling. A week passed by, and finally nearly a month had elapsed. The young writer suffered keenly from the ridicule of his friends in the meantime, and, truth to tell, his faith began to waver. During the fifth week, however, a letter came postmarked "Brattleboro, Vt.," and the young writer opened it with feverish haste.

There was his manuscript, true enough, but scarcely could he recognize it. Kipling had evidently put days of work upon it, making corrections, suggestions and interlineations until the story contained more of Kipling than of its original author. With the manuscript came a letter, in which Kipling said that he was not "in the habit of doing this sort of thing, because it took so much time." But in this case he saw a good chance to make $5 for a particular fresh air fund in which he was interested, and if Mr. —— thought the work he had put on this manuscript was worth that sum he would be glad to receive it for his fund and would send a receipted bill!

The $5 was sent.—Philadelphia Times.

HONEY.

When bees wend forth in black, continuous stream
And steadily return unto the hive,
When all the air with humming is alive
From early dawn to day's last golden gleam,
Then it behooves to work and not to dream!
Up! if your honey store you want to thrive,
Ere hungry drones with robber bees connive,
That you may gather all the blossom cream.
Yet let me pause a moment on the brink.
Between yon flower calyx and its spoil
What labor interveneth! Only think,
What you deem play to bees and me 'tis toil,
Yet labor, perspiration, many a sting,
So I've the honey—cheerfully I sing!

THE EARTH'S CRUST.

It Is Said to Be In a Constant State of Slight Agitation.

According to Professor John Milne, the crust of the great globe "upon which we live and have our being" is in a constant state of agitation, weaving in and out, up and down, like a circus tent in a cyclone. There are earth movements that are being experienced at all times and in all lands, but they are so slight from month to month and from year to year that they generally escape detection. In all the countries of Europe and in many of those of Asia, most notably Korea and Japan, these tiltings are so great as to be noticed even by the unscientific and inexperienced representatives of the lower castes. Germany seems to be the seat of greatest European earth crust agitation, Japan occupying a similar position in Asia. Of the above two countries Professor Milne says: "In both Germany and Japan a tidelike movement, too great to be produced by lunar attraction, has been observed, the ground being gently tilted once every 24 hours and sometimes twice, in which case the night disturbance would be greatest, and in all cases buildings, trees, etc., stand slightly inclined, like cornstalks in a gentle, steady breeze." In short, the earth is constantly breathing, so to speak, the crust marking each respiration by a gentle rising and falling, similar to that of the chest in air breathing animals. It is believed that a certain per cent of this earth crust disturbance is due to conditions similar to those which bring about earthquakes. This is especially true as far as it regards Japan, where it has been traced to the continual opening and closing of the broken strata in the main range of mountains.

Among other movements of the crust of our panting earth are the so called "microseismic" or "tremor storms," which are now defined as being long, flat earth waves, similar to those of an ocean swell. There may also be occasional disturbances in earth levels caused by earthquake waves, which quite frequently extend entirely around the world, although inappreciable to the senses of persons located only a few hundred miles from the "center of radiation" of the seismic shock.—St. Louis Republic.

Those Irrepressibles!

It was at a large party. A gentleman had the misfortune to break a glass. Little Lena, who was standing near her mamma, raised herself on tiptoe and whispered, loud enough for all the company to hear:

"And one of the borrowed ones too!"

Later in the evening the hostess gave one of her little daughters a nice apple.

"Now, give your mumma a kiss, there's a dear," said the child's uncle.

"I'm not allowed to when she's painted her face."

Little Paul was sent with a bunch of flowers to the manager's wife on her birthday and waited in silence after he had been dismissed.

Lady—Well, my young man, what are you waiting for now?

Paul—Mamma said I was not to ask for a piece of birthday cake, but wait till I got it.—Tagliche Rundschau.

Rockers.

Rocking chairs of the styles prevailing nowadays are believed to have been invented in the present century. They are mentioned by Venerable Bede: "The women now are so luxurious that they do have chairs with wooden circles on the legs and which sway back and forth in such sort that it maketh one sick to behold them."

Decision Anticipated Not Yet Handed Down by the Supreme Court.

WASHINGTON, April 2.—The United States supreme court did not hand down the decision in the income tax case. It was not stated when a decision would be reached. A large crowd was in attendance in anticipation that the important matter would be settled.

DISRUPTION MAY FOLLOW THE GOVERNMENT'S ACTION.

Provinces Jealous of Their Rights and Any Encroachment Will Meet with a Most Vigorous Protest—Manitoba Legislature Adjourns.

OTTAWA, Ont., April 1.—Although full particulars of the action taken by the Dominion government regarding the Manitoba school question have been before the public for some days, it is only now that this action is beginning to be fully understood. The Dominion government has done two things—it has ordered the provincial authorities to re-establish the separate schools abolished in 1890; and failing compliance by the province the Dominion has stated in so many words that a federal act will be passed for the purpose of attaining this object. And it is at this point that the danger of the situation appears. The provinces have always been jealous of their rights of self-government and an attempt to encroach on these rights by the passage of a federal law to accomplish a provincial object will in every member of the confederation outside of Quebec. This outcry will be especially vigorous in Manitoba and Ontario; because a federal law once passed for the purpose of re-establishing separate schools in a province cannot be repealed by any power short of that of the imperial parliament in England. Not only this. If the separate schools are re-established by federal legislation in Manitoba a precedent will be established which will permit of the Dominion interfering to prevent the Ontario legislature from divesting the separate schools of the province of privileges conferred by the latter body. It is because of the far-reaching consequences involved that there is such hostility to the idea of once entering the wedge of Federal Interference.

It is probable that re-establishing separate schools will be done by a federal enactment relieving Roman Catholic rate-payers in Manitoba from local taxation for public schools and giving Roman Catholic school boards power to levy rates on their own people for the maintenance of their own schools. Further than this it is likely that the Dominion government will retain a portion of the subsidy payable by the Dominion to the province under the terms of union and apply this as a supplement to the funds raised by local taxation for separate school purposes. Unless the present Dominion government is defeated before remedial legislation and another party is placed in power that will respect provincial rights there will be an upheaval that will strain the bonds of confederation.

MANITOBA LEGISLATURE ADJOURNS.

Opposition and Government Agree It Is the Wisest Course.

WINNIPEG, April 1.—No amendment was offered by the opposition in the legislature on the school question and after Lieutenant Governor Schulz had given royal assent to a number of bills passed the house adjourned till May 9, when Premier Greenway will announce the government's reply to the remedial order from Ottawa. Members of the opposition have all agreed with the premier that an adjournment was the wisest course to take at this critical period.

NOT A MILD ANSWER.

Organ of the Manitoba Government Replies to Ottawa Officials.

WINNIPEG, March 30.—The remedial order on separate schools does not come up in the legislature for several days, but it is nevertheless the one topic of the day here. Both the government and opposition are holding frequent caucuses, and what the outcome will be is difficult to predict. One thing is certain—the Manitoba government will resent the interference by Ottawa on educational matters. There is every indication that the policy of the opposition in the legislature will be to advocate some modifications in the school law. In other words, some sort of compromise. The opposition of Premier Greenway and the government is clearly outlined. The newspaper organ of the government has this official statement under the heading:

"Manitoba's Answer."

"The remedial order has been read in the legislature. We are asked to restore the school system that was in operation previous to 1890. Let Quebec and Ottawa rest assured that the restoration will never be made. Manitoba has too keen a sense of justice, too much regard for truth and equity to recognize as a religious aristocracy an element of its population by no means the most worthy. As a civilized people attempting to realize in a measure the ideals of the 19th century, Manitobans will not silently submit to the preposterous demand that they should turn back the wheels of progress 300 years. Mediævalism cannot or will not coalesce with modern thought. In place of the act of 1890 what a substitute is offered! We are asked and race against race; to break up the unity that should exist; to mutually support each other in wrong doing; to make the state the teacher of religious truth. How can any Romanist, believing that Protestant schools are teaching errors, conscientiously support them, and how can any Protestant, believing that the religious teachings of the Roman Catholic church are false, agree that a portion of his taxes should be devoted towards the support of such teachings? This is our answer to Quebec: We shall not allow the state to support religion; we shall not allow the church to control the state; we shall not return to the civilization of the dark ages; we shall not recognize Rome as better or in any way different from others. We shall hold to the principles of equal rights for all, and that principle shall be dearer to us than confederation itself."

To Set Creed Against Creed,

A STRANGE CASE.

How an Enemy was Foiled.

The following graphic statement will be read with intense interest: "I cannot describe the numb, creepy sensation that existed in my arms, hands and legs. I had to rub and beat those parts until they were sore, to overcome in a measure the dead feeling that had taken possession of them. In addition, I had a strange weakness in my back and around my waist, together with an indescribable 'gone' feeling in my stomach. Physicians said it was creeping paralysis, from which, according to their universal conclusion, there is no relief. Once it fastens upon a person, they say, it continues its insidious progress until it reaches a vital point and the sufferer dies. Such was my prospect. I had been doctoring a year and a half steadily, but with no particular benefit, when I saw an advertisement of Dr Miles' Restorative Nervine, procured a bottle and began using it. Marvelous as it may seem, but a few days had passed before every bit of that creepy feeling had left me, and there has not been even the slightest indication of its return. I now feel as well as I ever did, and have gained ten pounds in weight, though I had run down from 170 to 137. Four others have used Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine on my recommendation, and it has been as satisfactory in their cases as in mine."—James Kane, La Rue, O.

Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or sent direct by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid. It is free from opiates or dangerous drugs.

TIN CANS AND OLD SHOES.

They Well Reward the Italians Who Rake Them Out of the Ash Heaps.

On every dumping ground where the city contractors of Brooklyn place their ashes one may see constantly Italians working hard leveling the heaps, as load after load is deposited, and carefully placing the tomato cans and other castoff pieces of tinware in piles by themselves. The contractors do not object if the householders put old cans among the ashes, for this insures a careful leveling by the Italians at the dumping grounds at no expense to the contractors. The revenue from these cans that are collected by the hundreds and thousands is a matter of surprise to most persons. A two horse load brings from $0 to $8. It takes several days of hard work to get a big wagon load, but the Italians don't seem to mind the labor of it, for there is money immediately in sight as the piles of tin cans grow. They watch jealously their picking grounds and sometimes make special arrangements with the contractors for the privilege of scraping and raking the ash heaps over.

The tin cans are sold to men with furnaces, who place them in a big caldron, and under a slow fire melt the tin and solder and run that part off for future use and sale. Almost all the tin and solder is saved by this process and is salable for use in making more cans for preserving vegetables. The heat is then made intense, and the iron that remains is melted and cast into sash weights. The demand for these old cans is said to be greater than the supply, and one of the most valuable of the scavenger privileges that the Italians in large cities assume is that of working over an ash dump.

The Italians also collect odd bits of leather in heaps. Old shoes of a large size are always a special delight to them. A wagon load of them is always salable for use in making lampblack. There are other sources of profit in ash heaps, but the chief sources of revenue to those who pull them to pieces are the cans and the shoes.—New York Sun.

Teapots were the invention of either the Indians or the Chinese and are of uncertain antiquity. They came to Europe with tea in 1610.

KNOCKED OUT.

County Division Agitation Knocked Silly By a Bill That Has Just Passed The Legislature.

Honest John, of McIntosh, About the only Man Opposed to It's Passage In the House.

Not many moons ago a bill was ntroduced into the legislature that ommended itself to the good judgent of a very large majority of the embers, many of whom, no doubt, ad been through the same mill that he voters of Polk county experinced last fall. The bill provides hat no proposition to divide a ounty into more than two parts an be legally entertained. and while Ion John P., in the interest of the ve county scheme, did what he ould against it, he was signally in he minority and the bill became a aw. Last fall the schemers were efeated in their efforts to entail upn the people a burden of debt that ears would fail to remove and no ooner had they been fairly beaten han they at once commenced to laa to put the people to the expense f another election on the question nd this time they threatened to ake it still harder for the already verburdened taxpayer by dividing nto five counties. As it now is they an, at the next election only get a ote on a proposition to divide into wo parts. It is amusing to witness he frantic antics of the defeated and isappointed townsite boomers, who re talking in language more emhatic than polite. However the verage taxpayer, who would have ad to foot the bills had this scheme arried, can afford to let them howl way as much as they like.

G. A. R. Matters.

The regular meeting of Col. Cobam Post No. 90, on Friday evening f last week. was well attended, alost every member in the city being resent. One application was reeived and acted upon and several who had been suspended for failure o pay dues were re-instated. Financial matters were discussed and very interesting meeting it was. very encouraging interest has been wakened and if the old comrades vill now take hold of the matter in arnest and chip in the small amounts ue, the Post will soon be on a solid nancial basis and will go through he era of hard times with flying colrs. It would require only a very mall sum from each one now in arears to carry the Post through till all, when every one ought to be ble to square up fully. For the benfits received the cost is extremely ght, and all who are eligible, who ave not already made application hould do so and all whose names re enrolled should feel proud of that act and do all in their power to uild up the institution, and they vould if they fully appreciated the eaning of the order—to themselves nd to their children. There is not existence to-day an order so noble, o grand as the Grand Army of the epublic, and no order, the cost of aintaining which is so little. Fall , comrades, and lend us your influnce.

Attention, G. A. R.

There will be a special meeting at he hall on Friday evening for drill. full attendance is requested. By order of the commander.

T. A. HARRIS, Adj't.

In These Days Of Comfort and Convenience in Railway Train Services American people are apt to ecome a bit hardened and unapprecitive. They are getting sort of nlloused to luxury, so to speak, so hat it takes something unusual to voke words of praise. The Firemen's Tournament.

The authorities of ten villages have arranged to send big delegations to the Firemen's Tournament that occurs in this city June 25th, 26th and 27th. What has this city done to provide entertainment for its guests? The selection of this city for this honor should be met in an appropriate manner and the council could not do a more appropriate or graceful thing than by voting $300 for the purpose of properly entertaining the fire laddies while they sojourn with us. Aside from this feature of the case it would pay from a financial standpoint. The boys will bring along lots of their friends and their presence here will call in big crowds and our city should show that it is fully alive to the advantages thus offered. The JOURNAL has looked to see this matter acted upon ere this but as it has not been we would suggest the idea to our councilmen as a proper one upon which to take early and favorable action.

ANDY'S TEST.

On Friday a deaf man was around begging for alms and went into the Merchant's bank and tackled A. D. Stephens for aid. Mr. Stephens talked with the man a while and became convinced that the deaf man could hear all right enough, so he concluded to try him on. So he gave the man a ten-cent piece and as soon as the deaf man had passed out Mr. Stephens followed close behind him and threw a dollar down on the sidewalk behind the deaf man with so much force that it fairly jingled. Quick as a flash the "deaf" man turned and grabbed for the dollar and came so near getting it that it made Andy sweat. He was satisfied with the experiment, however, even if it did nearly cost him a dollar to find out if the man is really deaf or not.

The latest results of pharmaceutical science and the best modern appliances are availed of in compounding Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Hence, though half-a-century in existence as a medicine, it is fully abreast of the age in all that goes to make it the standard blood-purifier.

As baldness makes one look prematurely old, so a full head of hair gives to mature life the appearance of youth. To secure this and prevent the former, Ayer's Hair Vigor is confidently recommended. Both ladies and gentlemen prefer it to any other dressing.

BETTER ROADS.

Many of our exchanges are just now talking for better roads and urging upon their readers the great importance of the subject. It does not require much of a head to see the importance of this matter to farmers especially who are using the roads very frequently. With good roads they can haul good loads, with poor roads, very little sometimes hardly enough to pay the cost of hauling. Poor roads make the most expensive freight a farmer has to pay and every dollar he expends towards making better roads is money well expended. Far too little attention as a rule is paid to this important subject but the time is not far distant when the people will recognize more fully the importance of good roads.

Just a Little Bragging.

The Democrats were quite circumspect in their reports of the "great victory last week; the only bragging we have heard being in the following:

Special to the Globe:

CROOKSTON, Minn., April 2.—John R. McKinnon, Democrat, was elected mayor on the Citizens' ticket by 60 votes over M. R. Brown, the Republican candidate. The remainder of the ticket is mixed up.

That will do very well, but it is possible that there might have been more crowing indulged in if this matter had not been touched upon during the canvass.

The World Do Move!

The following communication from J. D. Ball, that appears in the Argyle Banner, shows that even in the populistic county of Marshall the people are not all devoid of sense yet. The ideas Mr. Ball advances are worthy of the consideration of farmers everywhere in the Red River Valley:

EDITOR BANNER:

Mr. Owen in Farm, Stock and Home, of March 1st says "farming is diversified" and seems to be carried away with the idea that because we produce such large quantities of all the cereals, that we must be diversified. We have a vast, rich and fertile soil, with almost unlimited resources, capable of producing fifty times what we now produce. We have thousands of acres of unoccupied lands in the Red River Valley. Supposed we have produced two million dollars worth of products, and it has cost us two and one half million dollars to produce the same; what have we gained and how are we coming out? It will not take a thinking man long to determine.

This is precisely our situation, and the main cause is that farming among the masses is not diversfied. When a man as a rule goes into the dairy business he goes in it almost exclusively and consequently there is no profit, and he will finally abandon it and say diversified farming is a failure. The idea seems to prevail that everything except wheat belongs to diversified farming and if anything else fails then it is all laid to diversified farming. Now the fact that one farmer always gets twenty bushels to the acre and his next neighbor across the road gets only from six to ten on land just as good, seems to be good proof that we must look somewhere else besides to the head of the government for the remedy. If one gets twenty bu. to the acre he gets a profit, but if he gets eight there is a decided loss, no matter how much the state produces, Now I don't say diversified farming is the remedy for all our ailments, but I do say that diversified farming as a whole, together with the Farmers' Institute and School of Agriculture, will do more to relieve the situation in the Northwest than all the other matters in Christendom.

Now what is generally meant by diversified farming is a general knowledge and constant study of real things and whatever is produced must come at a profit and lastly the building up and improving the home and soil, together with a good living. To mention all it includes would fill many columns. Thousands of little things are neglected by the farmers of the Northwest. As a rule the straw is burned, the manure and ashes are dumped into the river, and the soil is robbed year after year by sowing wheat after wheat until lots of them are only realizing from $4.00 to $4.50 per acre while the actual cost of producing it is $6 to $6.50 and yet Mr. Hudson in F. S. & H. says that better farming is not necessary or will not help matters in the least. In fact he estimates that it will make matters worse. To my mind it will create a larger surplus.

It is not the amount we produce, nor the price we get for it, but the profit we make on it, wherein the whole secret lies. Very little produce is shipped from this section that is bought of the masses, (outside of wheat) but what is bought from one is sold to the other. Our potatoes, corn, butter, etc., are produced only by a few who are making it their exclusive business; consequently there is not the proft there would be if it was produced by the masses, for while the wheat and oats are grown all the diversified side can be carried on without extra expense, And again, I am tired of this crying. Owen tells the masses that they are abused and there is no hope, that someone is robbing him, that he ought to have a dollar a bushel for his wheat, $3.00 for his day's wages and he should demand it—make laws to that end.

It seems to me that this kind of talk is not only the height of folly, but a damage to good government and society. Perhaps I look at it wrong, but it seems that they are trying to instil wrong principles in the minds of the people. I believe it is one of the laws of nature that you may ride a horse to water but you can't make him drink. You may offer him anything else that you have for sale but to force someone to buy is an impossibility. In conclusion all I have to say to the masses is—diversify, produce everything you can possibly consume on the farm and, thereby build up your homes, in which lies the strength and support of all society and government.

Council Proceedings.

Proceedings of a regular meeting of the city council of the city of Crookston held in the city hall April 9th, 1895.

Meeting called to order by President Alderman Morrisey.

Roll Call: Aldermen present, Sawyer, Childs, Buhn, Anderson, Morrisey, McGregor, Watts, Gervais, Davis, Motz, Kirsch.

Aldermen absent: None.

On motion the council proceeded to organize and elected M. E. Kirsch President, and Chas. E. Sawyer vice-president of the council for the ensuing year.

The president of the council then introduced retiring mayor Cromb who addressed the council in a neat speech, thanking the members of the council for the courtesy shown him while mayor.

Mayor Cromb then introduced mayor-elect John R. McKinnon, who made a brief but to the point speech followed by the reading of his message to the council by the president. On motion same was ordered published in the official paper of the city.

Mayor's Message.

TO THE HONORABLE CITY COUNCIL OF THE CITY OF CROOKSTON:

GENTLEMEN:

Pursuant to the established custom I find myself called upon to inaugurate a term of office as mayor of our city by addressing you a few remarks relating to what I consider will be good policy to be pursued by the new administration during the coming year. While I am not inclined to take a pessimistic view of the affairs of the city at the present time, still I am compelled to admit that the condition is such as to demand of us the most careful consideration.

In view of the condition of our treasury it is almost needless for me to advocate economy. While it would be a great pleasure to me to advocate a reasonable expenditure in public improvements, yet the situation is such as requires us to be as conservative as possible consistent with the welfare of the public.

To particularize, as a matter of business, I would advise that all expenditures, regardless of amount, be carefully inquired into; and in justice to the people who pay the taxes, would impress upon the council the wisdom of requiring in the future, compliance with the law in the publication of the financial statement, and that the item of expenditure designated as "incidental expenditure," be hereafter separately itemized and published annually.

One of the items of expense last year that particularly attracts my attention is that for caring for the poor. While I sympathize with and would gladly assist the deserving poor, I cannot lose sight of the fact that a little carelessness in this department may have the effect of placing a premium on fraud; and the greatest danger seems to lie in the practice of allowing different individuals to present bills to the city for board of persons whom they are pleased to call paupers. It would be better to let one person board all these people, and before they are classed as paupers their condition and antecedents be rigidly inquired into.

I am informed that the legislature has under consideration a bill providing for a county system of caring for the poor. I have not seen this proposed law and do not know its exact import, but if it will benefit us we should encourage its passage. In this connection I would recommend the abolition of the office of poor commissioner. It seems to me that the poor committee can easily attend to the duties of this office without extra expense.

As to other officers I would recommend that the city engineer be paid per diem for services actually rendered, and that the salary of purchasing agent be abolished; and in all other matters of salary would recommend that the council in its wisdom retrench as much as possible, consistent with the service to be rendered.

The deplorable condition of our streets and sidewalks demands immediate attention. It is better to invest a few dollars in this department now than to be called upon to assume an expensive damage suit. And I would also call your attention to the excavation of streets; that when streets are torn up for any purpose every effort should be made to replace them in the same condition as before the excavation begun.

While I advise conservative management of public funds I feel that

TWENTYTHREE DEAD

ANOTHER DISASTROUS EXPLOSION IN WASHINGTON STATE.

Only Two of the Men in the Mine at the Time Escape to Tell the Tale—West Virginia Building Collapses, Burying Seven Men in the Ruins.

SEATTLE, Wash., April 9. — A Whatcom (Wash.) special says: A Post Intelligencer correspondent rereturned at 2 a. m. from the scene of the terrible disaster at Blue Canyon mine, 15 miles from this city on Lake Whatcom, and is in possession of all the particulars now obtainable.

In the blacksmith shop near the tunnel lie the blackened bodies of 23 dead miners, while only two of all who were in the mine when the explosion occurred lived to tell the story of the frightful catastrophe and their own miraculous escape.

This disaster was undoubtedly caused by fire damp, which was exploded by a blast in the breast of the gangway. The faces of the men working in the breast are badly burned, but a majority of those who were working in the rooms off the gangway were only slightly disfigured by the fire and many of them not at all.

Physicians and miners say that the men working in the breast must have been killed by the shock of the explosion, while the others succumbed to the fire damp as they slid down from the rooms to the gangway, then filled with deadly gas.

BURIED SEVEN.

Two Buildings at Wheeling, W. Va., Suddenly Collapse.

WHEELING, W. Va., April 9.—Shortly after 8 o'clock a. m., the 5-story business house of Chapman & Sons, on Main street, in the wholesale district, and the adjoining 4-story hardware establishment of T. T. Hutchison, fell in suddenly without warning whatever, and buried seven persons in the ruins. "Dad" Williams, a carpenter, escaped with serious injuries, but T. T. Hutchison, the veteran merchant and four of his clerks were buried in the ruins. Mr. Hutchison was removed shortly, but his injuries will probably prove fatal.

The Hutchison building was of light construction and was declared unsafe years ago. The fire department did effective work in keeping down the flames while volunteers went to the rescue of the victims of the disaster.

At 10:25 Michael Ford was taken from the ruins alive, but fatally hurt. He had been pinned beneath an iron girder, and the dead body of young Horan lay across him.

It is known that Rev. Father H. F. Parke, vicar general of the Catholic diocese, is under the ruins. He was on his way to the cathedral from a train when the walls fell. The fire has extended to a large stock of oil and turpentine in Chapman & Sons' building, and adjoining property is in great danger.

At 11 o'clock the body of Benjamin Pritchard, the Buckhannon, W. Va., merchant, was taken out of the ruins. He was badly crushed.

The victims who were caught in the ruins, Horan, Wincher, Burch, the boy Cowl and Rev. Father Park, are believed to be undoubtedly dead.

EIGHT DAMAGE SUITS.

They Grow Out of the Great Explosion at Butte, Mont.

BUTTE, Mont., April 6.—The first damage suits, eight in number, growing out of the great explosion which occurred here Jan. 15, were filed in the district court. They were instituted by five different persons and aggregate a total of $145,000. With one exception all are against the Kenyon-Connell Commercial company, in the warehouse of which the first heavy explosion, which killed and injured so many people, occurred.

Forests Afire Again.

ST. PAUL. April 8.—Passengers who came down from Brainerd on the Northern Pacific report the existence of forest fires at numerous points. The woods are extremely dry, and settlers are apprehensive of disastrous fires unless considerable rains fall soon.

THE LADIES VOTED.

School Elections Held in Various Montana Cities.

HELENA, Mont., April 9.—School elections were held in all the principal towns of the state and were remarkable from the fact that in most of the cities at least half the vote was cast by women. In this city considerably more than half was cast by them. So far as known but one woman was elected trustee, and that was in Helena, Dr. Maria M. Dean being the successful candidate. There was a woman candidate in Butte, but the women there stuck strictly to their ticket and did not make a favorite of the candidate of their own sex. In Butte and Anaconda the issue was A. P. A. and anti. The A. P. A. carried Butte by a big majority, but were defeated in Anaconda. The same issue cut some figure in other places, but not so much so as in the two cities named.

Voted to Consolidate.

GREEN BAY, Wis., April 5.—Green Bay and Fort Howard voted to consolidate under the name of Green Bay by a vote of 12 to 1. This makes a new city, the fourth in size in the state.

Clean Sweep in Denver.

DENVER, April 5.—The Republicans made a clean sweep in the Denver city election, every man on their ticket being elected by majorities of from 5,000 to 6,000. The Republicans also elected all the aldermen.

Shot by a Mounted Posse.

WINNIPEG, April 6.—A Gleichen dispatch says the Indian murderer of Government Officer Skyner of the Blackfoot reserve, was finally captured and shot dead by a mounted posse of police. The murderer made a determined fight to the last.

FOR A NEW TRIAL.

Hennepin County's Assistant Attorney Receives Erwin's Brief.

MINNEAPOLIS, April 9.—The brief of W. W. Erwin, to be presented to the district court in the appeal for a new trial next Saturday, has been received by Assistant County Attorney Hall. Its points all relate to errors on the rulings of the court and are as follows:

First—In admitting Blixt's testimony that in a conversation with Hayward not relating to Miss Ging, Harry had offered him $100 to kill a man, woman or child.

Second—In admitting the testimony of Adry Hayward relating to the $450,000 fire. "It was not competent" and "the defense is unable to conceive how the court can reconcile that ruling with others which excluded exactly similar testimony offered by the state."

Third—In admitting the testimony of Vallely.

Fourth—In admitting the testimony of Mrs. Blixt that her husband appeared strange and not himself for two or three weeks before the homicide.

Fifth—In refusing to let the defendant ask Mrs. Emma Goodale whether she represented herself as able to foretell the future.

Sixth—In admitting the evidence of Mrs. Hazleton.

Seventh—In refusing to admit the testimony of Doctors Norred, Myers and Hance as to the shock to the nervous system in such a shot.

Eighth—In excluding the evidence of Adry's insanity.

Ninth—In excluding the testimony of Ernest Goodsell as to the finding of the whisky bottle.

Tenth—In not excluding the words "or not" from the testimony of Odell when he stated that Blixt had not made any such statement "whether Miss Wachter was present or not." It was a broader statement than was necessary foundation for a contradiction.

Eleventh—In refusing to permit the defendant to ask Adry if he was still being boarded at the county's expense.

Twelfth—In allowing Mrs. Adry Hayward to testify in rebuttal that her husband came home and got his revolver at 11 o'clock in the forenoon of Nov. 20.

Thirteenth—In refusing to permit the defendant to show where Adry was on the evening of Dec. 3.

Fourteenth—In refusing to strike out the testimony of Jenks as not proper rebuttal and unfairly held back by the prosecution as a trick.

Mr. Hall will prepare his brief between now and Saturday, when the motion will come up before Judge Smith.

HARRISON WILLING.

Hon. J. S. Clarkson Declares the Ex-President Is a Candidate for Nomination.

CHICAGO, April 5.—General J. S. Clarkson, who is in Chicago, stated positively that ex-President Harrison is a candidate for the presidency. "General Harrison," he said, "is not an active candidate perhaps, but he certainly is a 'receptive candidate.' Indeed he is, I think, one of the most prominent, if not the most prominent presidential candidate now before the public. As to who will be the party's choice in 1896, I am, of course, unable to say, but it is very certain that General Harrison will accept the nomination if it is tendered him."

A WONDERFUL RIFLE

At 2,000 Yards It Penetrates an Inch Steel Plate.

LEAVENWORTH, Kan., April 9.—The Krag-Jorgensen army rifle was tested publicly a second time on the Fort Leavenworth target range. The firing was at a distance of from 1,000 to 5,000 yards. At 1,000 yards a bullet went through nearly 36 inches of solid oak without being misshapen in the least and at 2,000 yards an inch steel plate was penetrated. At 1,500 yards a missile passed through a human cadaver and over 24 inches of oak.

Next Northwestern Regatta

WINNIPEG, April 8.—The annual meeting of the Minnesota and Winnipeg Rowing association will be held in Winnipeg next Wednesday. Delegates will be present from the Minnesota club of St. Paul, the Lurlines of Minneapolis, the Duluths, Rat Portage and the city club. The date and place of holding the regatta will be settled at this meeting and officers elected.

Palmer Objects.

SPRINGFIELD, Ills., April 8.—Senator John M. Palmer does not approve of the action of the Democratic central committee in calling a monetary convention to meet here June 4. He says it was an unwise move and does not represent the sentiment of Illinois Democracy.

Bissell Steps Out.

WASHINGTON, April 5.—Contrary to expectations, Hon. W. L. Wilson took the oath of office as postmaster general just before noon. Chief Justice Fuller appeared at the postoffice department at 11 o'clock, and administered the oath in the presence of the principal officials of the department. Mr. Bissell received employes in the afternoon.

Winslow's Majority 8,500.

MILWAUKEE, April 6.—The official canvas made in many Wisconsin counties increases Winslow's net majority for the supreme justiceship to 7,832, and the probability is that the official count in the counties in which the vote is at present estimated will increase the vote to 8,500.

Racing by Electric Light.

DENVER, April 8.—Denver is to have racing by electric light if the plans of a new company carry. The Denver Electric Track company, capital $25,000, has filed articles of incorporation with the secretary of state.

Has Upham's Signature.

MADISON. Wis., April 9.—Governor Upham has signed the bill providing for the establishment of a home for the feeble-minded. The bill appropriated $50,000 to be used this year and $50,000 to be used next year.

THE GIRL FOR HIM.

Having Passed the Rigid Examination, He Told Her of His Great Ambition.

"Miss Mildred," said the young man, "you are a sensible girl, and I know you won't mind my speaking to you frankly about a matter of the first importance. I have, as you know, a great and absorbing ambition, and you will readily understand, I am sure, how vital it is on the threshold of my career to unite myself with one who will not fail me afterward. Our tastes must not only be compatible, but in physical health, a subject but too often neglected, there must be no barrier to my ultimate success. You are, I believe, 23 years of age?"

"I am," she replied

"No physical disability of any sort on your parents' or grandparents' part, nothing hereditary, no consumption, insanity, alcoholism, suicidal mania?"

"Nothing of the sort," she murmured.

"Have you ever been troubled with rheumatism, inflammatory or otherwise, mental failings, such as aberrations, hallucinations, melancholia or hyperamia, cerebral or otherwise, or attacks of vertigo, dots on the eye, no fits, measles, smallpox, contagious diseases of any sort, heart or lung trouble?"

"Nothing," she said.

"Then, my own darling," he exclaimed, drawing her yielding form rapidly to his breast, "you are mine, henceforth to walk with me in all the glad sunshine of life, to be bound by the strongest ties of intellectual comradeship, and anon to share with me the fruit of my labor in the field I have chosen. Yes, my treasure," he said proudly as he gazed fondly into the face of the girl who had so successfully passed the searching examination imposed upon her, "if my long years of study are not in vain and I succeed in perfecting my exercising machine for woman I shall place you on exhibition in all of the principal cities of the world."—New York World.

Who She Was.

Two ladies were ushered into their seats in the parquet of a local theater last night and immediately commenced an animated conversation. A short time before the curtain went up a gentleman took a vacant seat in the row in front of them.

The ladies were candid in their criticisms upon the actors, but the actresses were terribly picked to pieces. These remarks were causing great annoyance to the occupants of the adjacent seats, especially to the gentleman referred to.

In the third act an actress performed a specialty. During its progress the remarks of the two ladies became a positive nuisance.

"How she is painted," said one. "That hair is not natural," said the other. "I wonder she is not ashamed to wear such short dresses," returned the first. Further remarks were cut short, for the gentleman in front could endure it no longer, and turning to one of the ladies said, "Madam, the lady in question is my wife."—Cincinnati Tribune.

NECKTIES ALWAYS NEW.

Mr. Feathers Learns the Secret of Mr. Ginks' Attractive Assortment.

"I am somewhat curious by nature," said Mr. Feathers recently, "and some time ago I was struck by the remarkable number of new neckties worn by young Mr. Ginks, who sits opposite me at our boarding house table. I proceeded to study them, and after a week or two I discovered that they were not only always smooth and fresh, but that their appearance was regulated according to their hues. For two days he would wear a black and gray tie, for instance. Then a black flowered red ground affair would creep out from his bosom, and then two or three more combinations would be worn. At last I could restrain myself no longer, and I asked Ginks to explain to me his necktie system. He looked mysterious and beckoned me to a secluded corner.

"'Mr. Feathers,' he said earnestly, 'I feel that I can confide in you thoroughly. The scarfs you have so kindly admired are five in number and are all I have. I wear one until it gets soiled, and then I drop it in gasoline outside of my window. After the liquid has evaporated I take the scarf in, and every sign of dirt has disappeared. By doing this in rotation with the five ties I keep up an appearance that would cost more than I could afford if I depended upon new ones.'

"I thanked the young man for his very interesting information," said Mr. Feathers in conclusion, "and I do not doubt that many others like him know the value of gasoline as a cleansing article and put it to good use. I hope they all use it in the open air, however, as it is a very volatile and inflammable liquid and is liable to explode if exposed in a room where there is a gas light or a fire."—Washington Star.

The Negro's Nose.

Some years ago Frederick Douglass addressed a convention of negroes in Louisville. He said in the course of his remarks that he did not think an amalgamation of the white and black races desirable, the pure negro being, in his opinion, the best of the race. While speaking his eyeglasses continued to slide from their perch. "But I wish," interpolated the speaker, "I wish we could get up some sort of an alloy for the negro which would insure a nose capable of holding spectacles."—Buffalo Courier.

No "Drawings" In His Ear.

Have you any special name to describe the wrinkles, or convolutions, or plaiting, or whatever is the proper name for the inequalites in the inner surface of the outer ear? A woman artist, discussing a man, disclosed the artist's name for them. She said the man could not be trusted "because he has no drawings in his ear." She meant that the inner surface of the "shell" of the ear was smooth.—New York Sun.

CHAPTER XVIII.

A STRANGE MEETING.

Ratigan was so exhausted as to be only able to give Maynard a few detached sentences, conveying some idea as to what he had accomplished. There was little that it was essential should be told except that Colonel Fitz Hugh would meet him between the lines as soon as he could get there. Casting a glance at his watch, Maynard noticed that it was 20 minutes to 12. The distance to the point of rendezvous, as near as they could estimate it, was two miles. Every minute was precious. It would be midnight before they could meet, and then they would only have about six hours in which to take measures to secure a reprieve. They could only do so by communicating with general headquarters, some 15 miles away. In any event the case was desperate. However, Maynard had been used in his scouting days to sudden transitions and had himself escaped from prison on the very night before his intended execution. Calling his striker, he bade him saddle Madge, who, he knew, could carry him over the ground at no laggard pace, and, ordering a mount for the corporal at the same time, the two waited impatiently till both animals were led up before the tent.

Mounting, they began to climb the Pea Vine ridge. Ratigan, who had been over the ground, led the way. They reached the top of the ridge, and the corporal pointed out the position on the creek, due west of Ringold, where they were to meet Colonel Fitz Hugh. Descending the slope, they came upon a Union vedette and were challenged with the usual words, "Who comes there?"

"The colonel commanding, with an orderly, inspecting vedettes."

They were advanced, gave the countersign and passed on. Taking a route between two roads and meeting no more guards, they cautiously approached the place of rendezvous.

On reaching the bank of the creek they descended it, the corporal riding ahead and peering through the darkness to discover what they were looking for. Presently the dark figure of a horseman emerged from a clump of trees on the opposite bank and rode forward toward the creek. Ratigan saw him, and, believing him to be some one in attendance upon Colonel Fitz Hugh, called:

"Oireland."

"To the rescue," called the man in a low voice, and rode up to the margin of the creek.

The two men arranged that Colonel Fitz Hugh and Colonel Maynard should advance to the respective places they themselves occupied as soon as they had withdrawn. Then, wheeling, each rode back to his principal, and in a few moments more the Union and Confederate officers faced each other from opposite banks of the creek. The distance between them at this point was but a few yards, and the night was not so dark but that they could plainly see each other. The equestrian figures stood silent, each waiting for the other to speak. The only sound came from the gurgling of the stream which flowed between them.

"You are Colonel Fitz Hugh, I believe," said Maynard.

"I am. I recognize Colonel Maynard's voice."

"I heard yours last on a certain evening a year ago—an evening memorable to both of us. Then you gave me my life, and by doing so placed yourself in a position to be shot for a traitor to your cause."

"Not for your sake, colonel—for the sake of another."

"It matters not for whose sake; the act remains. Once before you spared me when you found me under a roof which covered"—

"Then I respected the laws of hospitality, sacred in the south. Let us not dwell on these matters, colonel. Let us proceed with that upon which we have met for consultation."

"You are right. Time presses. Your sister stands convicted of the same offense as mine at the time of which we have been speaking and sentenced to die at sunrise. We meet to concert a method to save her."

"At my request. But any proposition must come from you, Colonel Maynard. I am unfamiliar with the feeling on the part of those in power in the Federal army as to executing a sentence of death upon a woman."

"Circumstances which I cannot explain, for they pertain to the situation in which these two armies are placed, render the feeling against your sister very severe."

"You have suggested my exerting influence from our side?"

"It was your sister who suggested it. I have little faith in it."

"What did you propose?"

"That which your sister would not accept."

"And that was?"

Maynard whispered in a strange, savage tone:

"To use my authority as commanding the brigade charged with her keeping to place her within your lines."

"And now?"

"I listen for some suggestion from you."

"I can think of none except, with your permission, to enter a protest over the signature of our commanding officers of highest rank."

"It would avail nothing."

"Then there is nothing to save her from this sacrifice, which, though she has always been prepared for it, and doubtless will now meet it, like the remarkable woman she is, with becoming fortitude, is still hard for those of us who love and respect her to bear. We will revere her memory as a martyr."

During this dialogue each man sat on his horse without any movement and spoke in measured, formal, automatic tones. Maynard's words were quicker than Fitz Hugh's, who held to the slower fashion of speaking, common in the south. After the last sentence spoken by Fitz Hugh there was a long silence. They had met for a purpose. Their meeting was a failure.

It seemed to both that they could hear their watches ticking away the seconds that lay between Caroline Fitz Hugh and death. Neither knew the agony suffered by the other unless he judged that other by himself. Neither had the heart to terminate the interview, though both knew that it was fruitless. A night bird set up a dismal cry. It seemed a deathknell.

Then Maynard broke the silence.

"Colonel," he said in a set voice, "remain here or meet me here at any time after an hour. It may be the small hours of the morning. It will be, if at all, before sunrise."

"What do you propose to do?"

"What I propose to do neither you nor your sister shall know till it has been accomplished."

"I will remain here or near by, and at 1 o'clock you will find me where I now am."

"Adieu," cried Maynard as he turned his horse's head and galloped away.

"Adieu," replied Fitz Hugh in the stately tone to which he was accustomed, and raised his hat as politely as if he were saluting in a ballroom.

Fitz Hugh rejoined his companion and rode away in the direction of Ringold, and Maynard, followed by Ratigan, started back toward their camp. Maynard's brain was in a fever. Time had been expended to no gain. The small hours were coming on, and only six of them would pass before the event he so much dreaded would take place. He had formed his resolve. Whether wise or foolish, right or wrong, practical or impossible, his resolution was taken. Once determined upon his course he spurred his horse on without thought of obstacle. Turning from the rough ground on which he rode, he was about to take the road, on which he might get on faster, when he was suddenly startled by the firing of a bullet and the sound that came with it. The shot rang close to his ear, almost brushing his temple.

Knowing that he had by his carelessness suddenly come upon a Union vedette he called out:

"Cease firing! Friends!"

In answer to a call to advance Ratigan rode forward and found a vedette, who had mistaken them for an enemy. On making themselves known they were suffered to pass on, and Maynard, feeling that he was too incautious to lead, gave way to Ratigan. They proceeded on their way with more caution and passed through a gap in the ridge leading to Reed's bridge.

The good footing of the road enabled them, after getting well into their lines, to proceed rapidly. After they had passed the ridge they left the road and turned northward. Soon after they reached camp.

CHAPTER XIX.

IN THE SHADOW OF DEATH.

Once inside his tent Colonel Maynard said:

"Corporal, I want you to get me the uniform of a private soldier. You must do so without exciting suspicion."

"Oi don't know how Oi'll do it, colonel, without goin back to me own camp."

"I fear that will take too long. Can't you steal one from one of the tents near by?"

"Oi moight be able to do it, and Oi might spend the whole night tryin. Oi can get one at me camp certain."

"I would take your jacket, but I want your assistance. There's no other way but for you to go to your camp."

"Colonel, Oi'll ride hard."

"Ride, and remember that every moment is worth years at any other time."

Ratigan lost no time in mounting and was soon galloping on his way. Once out of the camp from which he started he found no guards to pass and was able to drive his horse to the utmost. The night before he had chased the woman whom he had then known as Betsy Baggs in a mad race to capture her. Now he was tearing along in a mad race to save her from the consequences of his capture. Past woods and waters flew the corporal, over bridges and hills, through hollows and rivulets, till he came to his own camp. There he at once sought the quarters of Private Flanagan.

"Flanagan," he cried, shaking the private, "yer wanted!"

"What is it, corporal?"

"Let me take yer clothes and ask no questions."

"Take 'em. And divil a question will Oi ask except what ye do be wantin 'em for."

Ratigan seized the bundle, and, with an injunction to Flanagan to keep his mouth shut if he wanted to save himself from future trials, mounted his horse and was again flying over the ground back to Colonel Maynard's headquarters.

It was now the small hours of the night. The corporal cast his eye to the east and saw a faint streak of white light there. Digging his spurs into his beast's flanks and urging him with his voice at the same time, rider and horse sped on in a race between life and death.

"Go on, ye beast!" cried the corporal. "Go on, me darlin. Stretch yer cussed legs, for I don't care if ye kill yersilf if we lose no time. What's yer loife compared with hors? On with ye, me beauty! Win the race with the sun that is showin his light there, and Oi'll worship ye forever."

With such contradictory and incoherent phrases Ratigan urged his horse till he could go no faster. Again did hills, vales, woods, waters, fences fly by till at last the corporal dismounted at the camp he rode for, and in a moment was in Colonel Maynard's tent.

The corporal started back. A man stood there whom he did not recognize for a few moments as Colonel Maynard. He had no beard, while the colonel had had a heavy one. His hair and eyebrows were black, while the colonel's were light, and the hair which had hung below his hat in short curls was now cropped.

"Give me the clothes, quick!"

The corporal handed him the bundle, and Maynard lost no time in getting into them.

"Corporal," said the colonel, "let me explain what I am about to do. I know something of the blood that flows in the veins of Caroline Fitz Hugh. She will never accept her life at the price I intend to pay for it. She must not know that I intend to save her by violating a trust, by incurring my own downfall, or she will not leave her jail. Do you understand?"

"I do, colonel. She would chide me if she knew I was doing the same."

"While you have been away I have placed three horses in the wood yonder."

"I see, colonel."

"Corporal Ratigan, every man has his own part in life to perform. The distinctive feature in mine seems to be to decide quickly between conflicting duties. I am going to violate a trust, to perform a sacred obligation. If you will aid me, follow me."

Taking up a slip of paper lying on his camp cot, on which he had written an order, the two left the tent. They were challenged by the sentry on post, but giving the countersign proceeded till they were again challenged by the guard at the temporary prison. There the colonel advanced and gave the countersign and passed into the house.

The sergeant in charge met them and asked what they wanted. The colonel handed him the paper he had brought with him. It was an order for the person of the prisoner. The place was only lighted by a candle, and the colonel took care to stand with his back to it. But this was not necessary, for his disguise was complete. Corporal Ratigan remained without the door, on the porch.

The sergeant looked from the paper to the man who stood before him inquiringly.

"This is very strange," he said.

Maynard made no reply.

"Here is Colonel Maynard's order," the sergeant added, reading it over again. "Do you know what he wants with her?"

"Do you suppose I don't know any better than to ask questions when I get an order?" replied the spurious private gruffly.

The sergeant went into the room where Miss Fitz Hugh was confined and led her out, pale and wondering.

"It isn't sunrise," she said in a voice which it was difficult for her to keep from breaking.

"Come," said the colonel. She followed him to the porch, and Corporal Ratigan joined them, but it was too dark for the prisoner to see who he was, and he did not dare to make himself known. As soon as they had got to a safe distance he whispered:

"Darlin!"

"Rats!"

"Not a word till we get further away."

They walked on at an ordinary pace, though all desired to hasten. After passing some distance from the house Maynard turned and glanced back. He saw the sergeant watching.

"We must go to the tent," he muttered, and the three walked on. Before entering he looked again. The sergeant was still watching. He evidently wished to make sure that all was right. All entered the tent, while the colonel, standing at the front and peering between the tent flaps, watched for the sergeant to go back into the house. Presently he did so and left the way clear.

"Now come on."

Leaving the tent, they walked a short distance down the road. Not a word was spoken. Presently they turned aside and entered the wood. There they found the horses.

"Mount," said the colonel to the prisoner.

Putting a foot in his hand, she sprang up on to a horse's back. There was no sidesaddle for her, but the high front of a "McClellan" served very well, and she was so good a horsewoman that she could have ridden sideways on the animal's bare back. The stirrup was fitted, the colonel and Ratigan mounted, and the three rode rapidly away.

"We must dodge the picket," said the colonel. "Even the countersign might not avail us with a woman in the party."

"What does it all mean, Rats?" asked Miss Fitz Hugh. "I thought you were going to do your duty at all hazards."

"Well, there's different kinds of duties, and sometimes they won't work together. If savin a woman's life isn't a duty, then me mother didn't bring me up right."

"Who's the other?" she asked while Maynard was riding a little in advance.

"One who this night makes me his slave."

"And I from this night will be indebted for my life to both of you if you succeed in saving it. But I can't bear to have you sacrifice yourselves for me. You may be committing an unpardonable sin toward your comrades, but I cannot believe you are committing a sin toward our Father. And one day it will be all ended, Rats, and then who will care?"

"Oi know those who will rejoice."

Ratigan now took the lead, having passed over the route before several times and being familiar with the best way to get between the vedettes. Colonel Maynard dropped back beside the prisoner.

"Who are you?" she asked.

"One who serves you."

The voice sounded familiar, but was disguised, and she did not recognize it as Colonel Maynard's.

"Were you sent by Colonel Maynard?"

"No."

"Why should you try to save me?"

"Ask me rather why I should not."

It was plain the man, whoever he might be, desired to remain unknown, and she desisted from further questioning.

"After all, my death would not profit the Federal cause," she said. "My lips will be sealed to any information I may possess."

"Your information would be too late in any event. Had it been otherwise this plan would not have been attempted."

"Why so?"

"Your commander in chief of the Army of Tennessee has delayed too long already. He will attack us almost immediately. Your information would not now hasten that attack."

"How do you know?"

"We have captured prisoners showing that your men have been re-enforced from Knoxville and Virginia. General Bragg has ceased to retreat and is about to fall upon us with a concentrated army."

"You are right in assuming that neither you nor I can have influence for or against either side now. These troops have been coming from Virginia for a month. They are nearly all arrived. You may expect to hear the opening shot of a great battle at any moment."

The corporal, who was in front, reined in his horse and held up his hand in warning. They were on the edge of a wood and within a few hundred yards of the creek and could see to the right and to the left.

"My God!" exclaimed the corporal, "there are vedettes there, and vedettes there," pointing north and south. "And they are both comin this way. We must go back."

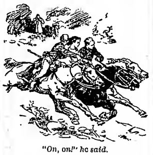
Colonel Maynard rode forward to see. He glanced at both parties of vedettes, then in front of him. From that front at that moment there came a horse's neigh. It was answered by a neigh from behind the three on the edge of the wood.

"Your people are where that horse neighed. Can you keep your seat in the saddle for a dash?"

"Yes."

"We are surrounded. It is the only chance. Are you prepared? Ready! Go!"

The two men dug their spurs into their horses' flanks, and all three shot out toward the creek. They had not gone a hundred yards before they heard, "Halt there!" immediately followed by a shot. They paid no attention to either, but dashed on over the uneven ground, the two men riding close on either side the prisoner for fear she would lose her balance. Her horse stumbled, but recovered. A volley came from the vedettes riding from the south, but no one was hit. In crossing a gully Miss Fitz Hugh tottered sideways, but Maynard caught her and righted her.



"On, on!" he said.

"On, on!" he said. "A few hundred yards, and you are saved."

Then came another volley, this time from the party advancing from the north. Corporal Ratigan swayed in his saddle, but recovered himself.

"They are advancing to meet us! Quick! Down the bank! Through here! It is not knee deep!"

A third volley came, but it did no harm. It was too late to stop the fugitives now. They rode right into a party of Confederate officers.

Friends gathered about Miss Fitz Hugh. Her brother, being in presence of others, restrained his desire to throw his arms about her neck. He lifted his hat to her as politely as if she were as nearly related to the rest as to himself, then took her hand and kissed it. Suddenly, in the midst of a shower of congratulations—a wild, irrepressible cheer that burst spontaneously from the party—Caroline Fitz Hugh gave a shriek. Corporal Ratigan had fallen from his horse and lay white and bleeding on the ground. Springing from her own horse, she bent over him and raised his head.

"O God, he's dead!"

African Grosbecks.

The social grosbecks of South Africa live in large societies. They select a tree of considerable size, and literally cover it with grass roof, under which their common dwelling is constructed. The roof serves the double purpose of keeping off the heat and the rain, and 400 or 500 pairs of birds are known to have the same shelter. The nests in this aerial dwelling are built in regular streets and closely resemble rows of tenement houses.

My Wife Is Nervous

Says many a man and too often he is inclined to blame the poor, tired woman who cannot eat or sleep, whose whole life is filled with misery because her blood has become impoverished and her nervous system exhausted. She needs a building up medicine like Hood's Sarsaparilla. A few bottles will enrich and vitalize her blood, tone and strengthen her digestive organs, give her a good appetite, enable her to sleep soundly, banish her nervousness and bring back her smiles. Mr. J. W. Roberson, of Greenfield, Tenn., says: "My wife began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla about three months ago and she is now taking her third bottle. She has been in poor health for fifteen years. Hood's Sarsaparilla is doing her more good than any other medicine she has ever taken. Her appetite is better, she looks better and there has been improvement in every way."

THE Secretary of State, Walter Q. Gresham, still continues to hang out despite the rumors of his resignation. When there is a vacancy on the bench he will, no doubt, resign

THE leading financiers of the day are prophesying the return of better times at an early day but this does not seem to bring them. The elusive dollar seems just as hard to capture as it has been ever since the Democrats took control of the government.

THE house judiciary committee having the Ives impeachment case under consideration, submitted a short report last week to the effect that they were not able to agree upon the subject and would submit a majority and a minority report this week. It is thought very probable that the matter will not go further than the House, but a big fight is liable to occur there.

THE legislature now in session will soon be a thing of the past, when the people can take a rest for another two years. The good that it has done will endure and we trust that the evil it has accomplished will speedily die out. There are yet some important matters before it that we hope to see passed.

ON Tuesday morning Chief Gonyea tendered his resignation as chief of the city police which resignation was duly accepted. Louis Gonyea has been the efficient chief for a consecutive period of five years during which time the affairs of that office have been ably conducted. He was for three years previous a member of the department thus giving him eight years of experience on the force and whoever succeeds him must be indeed a good man to fill his place. The JOURNAL wishes him abundant success in whatever calling he may engage in in the future.

ELSEWHERE in this issue will be found a call for a special school meeting in Independent school district No. 1, to vote on an issue of $12,000 in bonds, to build a large school bulding upon the central school grounds. The need of additional room has been a growing one for several years, but the times did not seem propitious for building, so the subject has not received proper attention until the time seems to have arrived when the matter seems imperative, if we would supply the growing needs of the city. For a number of years it has been impossible to grant all the requests that have come in from outside the district, the management feeling well content if they could take care of all the city children, but the time has arrived when this is becoming no longer possible and something must be done. The added facilities would again render it possible to take care of outsiders, which would bring a revenue that would be a great help. It seems to us as though there can be no trouble to vote the bonds as this is certainly a wise thing to do.

HONEST CITY GOVERNMENT.

Nothing could better illustrate the fundamental soundness of our American body politic than this general awakening in favor of honest city government and progressive social work in our population centres. Our city governments have been our most conspicuous failure and the most dangerous of all the evils which threatened our national life. Having finally awakened to full appreciation of the facts as they were, the American people are bestirring themselves to make the cities wholesome and good. They will not accomplish everything by virtue of a wave of enthusiasm, but the new movement will not prove itself a passing whim. It is based upon sound principles, and it is supported by the deep determination of thousands of men and women who are capable of persistence through long years. Theirs is a determination to bring our American cities up to the standard of the best American ideals, and also up to the standard of the best foreign achievements in municipal organization and improvement.—From "Our Civic Renaissance," by Albert Shaw, in the April Review of Reviews.

Commerce and the Pacific Coast.

How many realize that of the 167,000 miles of railroad in the United States in 1889, 71,600 miles, or nearly one-half, are west of the Mississippi, and that of this 11,470 miles are west of the Rocky Mountains? The railroad building of the East has been of steady growth, but that of the west has leaped into existence almost within a decade. The "pony express" and the "prairie schooner" of Seward's day have given place to six great trans-continental lines of railway, which penetrate from the East to the Pacific Coast, all of them constructed since 1869. The railroad building of the East is comparatively at a standstill, but it is continuing in the West on a scale which will soon give it a preponderance. Already California stands third on the list of value per capita of railroad property, owning $741 per capita, being surpassed only by Rhode Island and Massachusetts, and being followed by New York with $549 per capita, Ohio with $433, and Virginia with $248, those States being the highest in their respective sections. California alone mined one-third of the gold product of the United States in 1833. During the ten years from 1884 to 1894, the shipping owned in the Atlantic and Gulf States decreased 710 in number and 135,000 in tonnage. During the same period the shipping owned on the Pacific Coast increased from 1,221 with a tonnage of 334,669 in 1884, to 1,520 and a tonnage of 456,358 in 1894, an increase in number of 499, and in tonnage of 121,690.—From "The Growing Greatness of the Pacific," by The Hon. Lorrin A. Thurston, Hawaiian Minister at Washington, in North American Review for April.

Grant County Herald: Two years ago Otter Tail county was represented in the senate by Populist Hompe, who voted against the Markham bill. This year it is represented by Dr. Cole, a Republican, who voted and labored faithfully for the Anderson bill. The two bills are practically the same, and, as is well understood, provided for the taxation of unused railroad lands. It but another illustration of profession vs. performance.

In the Review of Reviews for April the editor discusses recent political events, especially the doings of the Fifty-third Congress, the appointment of delegates to an international monetary conference, the election of U. S. senators by various state legislatures, the deadlock in Delaware, the constitutional convention in Utah, the arguments before the supreme court on the constitutionality of the income tax, the change in the administration of the post-office department, and other incidents of the month under review.

TO JOHN L. SLEEPER.

Why do you cling unto life, my brother? Why do you cling unto life, I say?
Why do you weep when the yoke and fetters of flesh from a dear one drop away?
You know this world is a house of sorrow, you know this world is a house of sin;
That pain is the Dead sea fruit of pleasure and will be ever, as it hath been.
Why, then, cling unto life, when over the blue,
transpicuous rim afar
Shineth the walls of the Wondrous City, where only blessings and blisses are?
Why do you beat your hands with passion and storm the sky with your plea and prayer
Whenever passes a stainless spirit forever out of your clasp and care?
You say he goes to a glad, brave kingdom,
over a vague and voiceless sea,
Where never a last goodby is spoken and never and never a grave shall be,
And where from rapture to perfect rapture,
with crown and lyre, he soars and sings,
The chrism of Christ upon his forehead, the glory of God upon his wings.
If I thought as you think, my brother, if I believed in a better sphere
Beyond the grass and the golden lilies that blossom over a dead man here,
I would tingle with great strange gladness
whenever a friend of mine should die;
I would robe him in festal raiment, and I would kiss him a gay goodby.
And, oh! when unto me came the hour—the miracle hour that comes to all—
Never a cypress branch nor blossom should throw its gloom on my gorgeous pall.
At my funeral should be dancing and dainty feasting at festal board,
Should be singing and jests and laughter and gurgle of wine in the glasses poured,
And jubilant bells should rock the steeples
when I was borne to the gay, bright grave,
And rattle of drums and trill of trumpets blend in a glad thanksgiving stave.

A NEW VOLUME.

This Easter issue is the initial number of Volume XIII of MUNSEY'S MAGAZINE. The volume just closed has the distinction of having shown a greater gain—a vastly greater gain—in circulation than any single volume of a magazine in the whole wide world has ever had. It started with the October issue with a circulation of quarter of a million, and ended with the March issue with half a million. The increase in these six months alone, represents a larger circulation than that of any other magazine either in the old world or the new, while the total circulation of MUNSEY'S is in excess of the combined circulation of any other four magazines in America.

SILVER.

Simulteneously with the adjournment of Congress came the announcement of the proposed formation of a "silver party," a political organization whose chief plank should be action in regard to the use of silver as coined money. Perhaps at this time a few non-political facts in regard to silver may be of interest. Like gold, silver is almost universally diffused througbout nature. It is computed that the waters of the ocean contain silver to the value of ten thousand millions of dollars. Unlike gold, however, silver when freed from the rocks where it is buried, is driven into new combinations by the elements, or even dissipated and lost. Hence there is no silver "placer" mining, but it has to be conducted by subterranean digging, and the operations are expensive. Careful experts have concluded that gold and silver have cost all they are worth in actual labor, and it is a matter of some doubt whether they have not been produced at a loss. The "ratio" of the two metals has greatly varied. In ancient Arabia silver was of the greater value, but since the seventh century the ratio has varied from 7 to 1 to 16 to 1. The lines of the Burlington Route reach the Colorado and Black Hills silver districts, besides being the favorite route from the Northwest to Chicago and St. Louis. Ask your home agent for tickets via this line, or write to W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul, Minn.

Party Lines in the Senate.

In calculating the strength of parties in the senate as it will be organized next winter, it must be remembered that Utah will adopt a constitution and elect a state legislature in November, and that two senators from this forty-fifth member of the union of states will bring the whole number up to ninety. If, as would now seem likely enough, Utah's first senators should be Republicans, that party would be very near the point of control. On questions other than monetary ones, enough Populists would probably act with the Republicans to give the senate a Republican complexion. But it is clear that party lines cannot be maintained in the senate on any of the really critical issues that are likely to arise, and no one looks forward with any degree confidence to the conclusive settlement of any monetary or economic problem by the new congress.—From "The Progress of the World," April Review of Reviews.

The Future of Greece.

What of the Hellenic future? With a population of hardly two and a half millions, Greece has a debt of some $164,000,000—or some $75 per capita. This debt is equal to 14 per cent. of the entire estimated national wealth and to the total national income for two years. The forced currency aggregates $21,000,000, or $13 per capita—worth a little more than half its face; but our own green back touched bottom at less than at hird of its face value. The currency is not excessive—not sufficient in fact to do the money-work of the kingdom properly. It is not inflation that has wrecked it; not fever, but exhaustion.—From "The Living Greek: His politics and progress," by Professor J. Irving Manatt, in the April Review of Reviews.

The Bill for University Extension.

[Minneapolis Tribune.]

Few bills presented in either house this year are of more vital interest to the people throughout the state than the one on University extention introduced by Mr. Staples, of Dakota county, and which is now before the educational committee of the house.

The bill asks for the modest sum of $2,500. Everybody knows that Mr. Staples not only looks out for the real values of the measures he advocates, but sees to it that there is no extravagant expenditure of the public funds, even for a good cause; and it is doubtful if this money could be placed anywhere to better advantage. It is for the encouragement of of that spirit which is of the highest value to every community; to aid earnest, thoughtful, ambitious men and women who, while they are pursuing their regular avocations, desire to obtain wider knowledge and higher education.

The idea of giving educational facilities to its adult citizens is not new to Minnesota. It is a popular idea, and has been pronounced upon favorably by several legislatures; and, what is more, its beneficial effects have been tested for years all over the state, and have met with universal approval. The teachers' institute began the good work; then came the farmers' institutes, which have made such a grand record and done so much, not merely in the way of conveying practical information, but by awakening thought and arousing higher ambition. The summer schools which have been held for the last few years, and are so deservedly popular are in the same line. Give to the people better facilities for education, stimulate them to life long study and growth, and you have made of them a progressive people who will be, and who deserve to be, free.

It would seem that everybody must favor this bill, unless it is someone so little in sympathy with Minnesota thought and feeling as not to care for higher education. The representatives of these two cities, which have enjoyed so freely the bounty of the state in education, surely will not begrudge to the other towns this small appropriation for those advantages which they and their constituents so highly prize. Those towns which have had University extension lectures will not fail if they know of this bill, to urge their representatives to vote for it, for they know the value of this work, and will gladly secure for themselves and extend to others these increased facilities. Those who have not had these advantages are the very ones for whose benefit especially the bill is framed, and there are certainly in all of them wide-awake friends of higher education who will not let this opportunity slip for want of earnest effort on their part.

One feature of this bill which will especially commend it to the people of the more distant part of the state is that it proposes to equalize the expense of a course of university extension lectures to all centers by paying all but $15 of the travelling expenses of the lecturer. And it is for this purpose that a large part of the $2,500 will be expended. At present, if Crookston or Luverne or Winona want a course of lectures they must pay really double what is charged to Minneapolis or St. Paul.

Another valuable provision of the bill is for books to aid in the study of the subject presented. The lecturer on history or political economy or literature will direct in the selection of such books as are needed for study in his course, and these will form a small circulating library which will be left in the care of the local center for the use of the class, from the beginning to the end of the course. These libraries will be a real godsend to many students whose facilities for obtaining books are very limited.

In the way of libraries another excellent bill is now before the house and has met with much favor. It is the one which had its origin with Miss Countryman, assistant librarian of the Minneapolis Public Library. This provides still further for that great need of the student—books, books. Those who live in large cities, where there are nowadays almost universally good public libraries, cannot know how students in small towns are hampered for want of books. Few can buy for themselves a tithe of the book they absolutely need in pursuing thoroughly any course of study. The discouragement which this lack of books occasions often palsies what might have been successful effort. And then access to books in itself stimulates desire for knowledge.

The state of Minnesota, which has made so proud a record in education, should see to it that these important matters are not overlooked nor postponed. We cannot afford to wait two years for measures that cost so little and are so valuable.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

From our Regular Correspondent.

WASHINGTON, April 5, 1895.

Mr. Cleveland does not regard the idea of starting his boom for another nomination by making a gold speech at Chicago, in accordance with the invitation recently extended to him by an alleged non-partisan committee of one hundred business men, as favorably as he did before the returns from the Chicago municipal election reached Washington, and it is probable that he will decide that "important public business" will prevent his going to Chicago to make a financial speech. He has his doubts about attempting to launch a Cleveland or any other democratic boom in a city that has just gone republican by more than 41,000 particularly when he remembers that the same city was carried by 33,000 majority in 1892 by the democratic Presidential ticket. A change of more than 70,000 votes in the short space of two years and a half indicates even to the slow moving mind of as great an egotist as Mr. Cleveland that the democratic party is losing popularity in Chicago, as well as elsewhere.

The rumor that Secretary Gresham intended to resign, which was started anew early this week, was the source of considerable amusement among those who are acquainted with the situation. The denial that quickly followed the rumor was not needed to convince them that Secretary Gresham would not resign unless compelled to, although he now knows that the object for which he changed his politics—the hope of succeeding Mr. Cleveland as president—is impossible of attainment. But he needs the salary and he also needs the friendship of Mr. Cleveland, upon which he depends for a restoration to a place on the bench. With the possible exception of Secretary Herbert, Mr. Gresham is the poorest member of the cabinet, and, although an able lawyer, he has been so long out of active practice that he fears he would not find it profitable to resume. It is probable that Secretary Gresham will resign before the expiration of Cleveland's term, but it will be to accept another office and not to retire to private life.

According to a story being repeated around Washington, three political and personal friends of Mr. Cleveland, one of them a member of the cabinet, were smoking their after-dinner cigars in a room in the White House the other day and discussing the political outlook, when one of them said: "Speaking of political predictions reminds me to make one myself. The next presidential campaign will see two Democratic parties in the field. One of them, the first to nominate a ticket, will have a free silver man for its candidate, and a big, broad silver plank for him to run on. The other will be a Democratic party of smaller dimensions. It will stand for gold alone. Its candidate for president will be an out and out gold man—will be called a 'gold bug" or probably a gold elephant, by his opponents—and the financial plank of the platform upon which his campaign will be made will advocate the gold standard without any ifs, ands or buts. This party will not expect to win; it will merely make the campaign for principle. Now for the other side. The Republican party will have for its candidate a man who is friendly to silver without being an enemy to gold, and its platform will reflect his views and he will win." When asked to complete the prediction by naming the three candidates the gentleman said: "The identity of the free silver man and the man who is friendly to silver is purely speculative at this time. But the choice of the gold wing of the Democracy is a foregone conclusion; it will be Grover Cleveland." Unless all signs fail two of this would-be prophet's predictions promise to become facts—the election of the Republican candidate and the nomination of Mr. Cleveland on a gold platform.

The friends of real reform in the civil service—not the spurious article given by this administration—are pleased with the black eye given the spoils system by the majority of 45,570 votes in favor of the civil service law in Chicago. Civil Service Commissioner Roosevelt discussing this subject said: "I want to see the civil service system become universal, in the first place, because the offices ought to be out of politics, and the service would be improved if they were, but, in the second place, and chiefly, because I wish to take out of public life the utterly demoralizing and degrading influence of the spoils system. It has been, on the whole, the most fruitful of the causes which tend to the degradation of American politics, and in no way can we so strengthen the forces which tend to the elevation of our political life as to utterly destroy the spoils system."

Mr. Cleveland and his family this week moved out to their suburban residence and the force of detectives who stand guard over his precious person will now have to work a little harder, as some of them always accompany him on his trips to and from the White House and regular patrol duty has to be done night and day over the grounds of his majesty's whileom residence, lest some tramp or office seeker should dare to intrude upon his privacy. You can call this "Jeffersonian simplicity" or Russian exclusiveness, just as you please.

Passage of the Lottery Bill.

One important action in the interests of morality must be remembered to the credit of the late congress. In its closing hours it passed the anti-lottery bill, which was designed to give complete and full effect to the national victory won by the best people of Louisiana when they spurned a bribe of thirty millions of dollars or more, and refused to extend the charter of the Louisiana Lottery Company. The business of that concern was transferred nominally to Central America as headquarters. By various methods of evasion it has been able in great measure to baffle our postal administration; and where it could not make use of the post office it has had especially favorable contracts with the express companies. These indeed have been its chief allies; and through them it has carried on an immense business in the United States from its secure rendezvous in Honduras. The measure which has now become a law has had its most aggressive and untiring instigator in the person of one of the professors in the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Mr. S. H. Woodbridge. For nearly two years he has been working for the passage of this law which is so drawn as to make the Honduras Lottery Company and every concern of that sort an absolute outlaw. The circumstances under which final action was reached in the Senate on the last day of the session, in time for the engrossed bill to be signed by the President only five minutes before the latest legal moment, form a story that is quite dramatic. Mr. Woodbridge's campaign well illustrates what one ernest reformer can do when he has wisely selected his point of attack and has the persistance to keep constantly at work upon it.—From "The Progress of the World," April Review of Reviews.

With good weather this week the most of wheat and oats will be sowed and the balance of the grain can all be in by May 1st. This is one of the earliest seasons ever known in Polk county.

Many of our farmers have signified their intention to put in five or six acres of corn this season. This is an excellent idea since the fact that corn can be successfully grown has been demonstrated.

This is what the Plaindealer says of a Grand Forks horse: "Lew Freeman has disposed of his pacing horse Dan Mace to a Minneapolis party for $400 and ships the animal to the Flour City tonight."

Chris Hoch took Manager Davidson, of the Wilson Theater Co., out on Saturday for a drive in the country. Chris said they were prepared for geese or any other wild animals they might encounter on the way.

The village council of Fertile has made a liberal appropriation to defray the expenses of its fire department at the tournament to be held in this city on June 25th, 26th and 27th. They have provided for a big turn-out on that occasion.

C. H. Saake sold the last team of the lot for which he traded his farm, on Friday of last week. Our reporter saw John Amundson looking at that team in the morning and we reckon that he caught on.

Eiken & Muus opened up a full line of dry goods and groceries in the store recently occupied by A. Holmboe on, on Monday. The boys are thorough business men, have lots of friends in Polk county and should do well.

J. P. Matson and son come down from Warren on Thursday evening and spent Friday in the city. The Sheaf under Matson's guiding hand, has become one of the best Republican papers in the north part of the state.

Next Sunday at the Congregational church Rev. Mr. Fisher will give an Easter address in the morning, and in the evening an Easter concert will be given by the Sunday school. An offering for Home Missions will be received.

Judge Montague came up on Sunday morning to get acquainted with his family, after a long spell of absence in St. Paul, where he has been busy with the impeachment proceedings. He goes back this week on business before the supreme court.

Joe Smith was in from Red Lake Falls on Saturday last. He has sold his mercantile business and will remove from the Falls. Mr. S. has been a resident there for years and his removal will be a great loss to the village. Mr. LaBissionere, who has been clerking for Smith succeeds to the business.

The N. P. receivers have commenced proceedings to annul the contract that exists between the road and the St. Paul Union Depot Co. The managment desires to use its own line between the two cities and furnish its own depots. If they succeed in this effort they will build a fine large depot in Minneapolis.

John McLean is fitting up the room in the McKinnon block that was occupied by the late Judge C. S. Spendley, and will occupy it as a justice shop, where he will be prepared to retail justice by the day or job. All in need of a little pure, unadulterated justice will take due notice and govern themselves accordingly.

Peter Lindeloo was brought over from East Grand Forks on Monday for examination in Probate court on suspicion of insanity. The conclusion arrived at was that it was the character of the red liquor he had imbibed that caused the craze more than anything else. He was discharged.

On Tuesday Louis Gonyea completed a deal that he has had in contemplation for some time by which he becomes the owner of the fruit busines of the Clements Bros., on Second street. The JOURNAL predicts for Louis as successful a career in this new line as he has had as city marshal.

J. R. Barb said to the JOURNAL man on Monday: "I feel fully convinced that I am leaving here just at the wrong time, for I believe that the tide is now turning and from this on farmers are going to make some money here. If I had my farm back I should keep it one more year anyhow. I expect to start for my new home some time this week."

I. U. Jennings, as independent candidate for justice of the peace made a splendid run coming within a very few votes of being elected. An independent candidate always has the short end of the evener and must be a most excellent man to win the game. Mr. Jennings has every reason to feel proud of his vote even if he did lose by a few votes.

Mrs. Emma Ridley, only daughter of C. P. Hathaway, Esq., died on Saturday morning, of consumption, at the age of 26 years. She leaves two small children, a girl and a boy. Last year, with her two children, she came from her home in Maine, stricken with the fell disease and it was thought at that time that she would not live through the spring, but the vital spark held out for a year.

The importance of the new German Ship Canal is set forth in "The Progress of the World" in the April Review of Reviews. The editor recalls the fact that the Straits of Cattegat, from which shipping will be diverted by the new canal, once levied heavy tolls on our merchant marine, and that our Government took the lead in securing freedom of navigation through them.

The funeral of Mrs. Archie McKinnon, which took place at St. Mary's church on Saturday at 10:30 was attended by a large concourse of friends and neighbors. The edifice was taxed to its atmost seating capacity and many went away unable to find a place to sit. A long line of carriages followed the remains to their last resting place at Oakdale cemetery.

Jim Greenhalgh took a cup of tea on Monday—and has been kicking about it ever since, because he took it in the left hind foot and has had to wear a shin-plaster ever since—and a big gum boot. He says it was hot enough for him at the time, but that there has been a sort of a coolness in the family ever since. Like the original Adam, Jim says: "The woman was to blame."

J. L. Hampson, of Ada, passed through the city on Wednesday morning on his way to the coast for a few week's outing. Fred says the call for lumber in Norman county never was greater than this spring and there seems to be plenty of money for it.

Appearances indicate that about the usual amount of wheat will be sowed in the county this spring. While many would like to sow flax comparatively few will be able to secure the seed to sow, and, as they have the wheat they will sow that. It strikes us that it would be a good idea for them to sell their wheat, or half of it at least and buy what flax they could with the proceeds.

Prof. McCrillis was out near Marin station with his wheel one day last week, when an accident occurred to the wheel and he made for the station to catch a freight. He was just a few minutes too late but had the consolation of seeing Frank Gravel up in the pilot house of the caboose urging him to "hurry up." It is said that the professor can tell just how many ties there are between Crookston and Marin.

The Wilson Theatre Co. opened a week's engagement at the Grand on Monday evening in the "White Slave" playing to a good house. The specialty work is excellent and the company is sustaining its old-time reputation for good work. Numbers are being given out and on Saturday evening a bed room set will be given to the person in the house holding the lucky number. Tickets 10, 20 and 30 cents.

C. S. Richardson one of the prominent farmers of the town of Farley was in the city this week and gave the JOURNAL a pleasant interview. He reports seeding well along in that town; says that about the usual acreage of wheat will be sown, but many of the farmers will endeavor to have a little bigger corn patch than usual this year. They don't seem to catch on to the flax idea with eagerness. Mr. R. is treasurer and assessor of his town which shows his prominence up there.

The funeral of Mrs. Ridley, at the Salvation Army barracks on Monday, was attended by a large concourse of friends and neighbors. The house was filled to overflowing, many standing in the aisles and many could not get in who desired. The simple services of the army were very impressive and affecting. More than one-half of her life had been passed in this city and very many of her young friends were out to pay the last tribute of respect to the departed one. The floral offerings were appropriate and beautiful.

Speaking of some good stock the Fertile Journal says: "Alex Holden, of Ada, was in town Monday on business. Mr. Holden is a great admirer of Jersey cattle and has a number of fine full blooded ones on his farm near Ada. He commenced raising them a few years ago when he purchased a full blooded bull and heifer from Messrs. Hacker and Gregg, of the state experimental farm at St. Anthony Park. Mr. Holden has a fine young Jersey bull he does not need and anyone wishing to secure something in that line will do well to correspond with him. Mr. Holden says he will exhibit some of his stock at our fair next fall."

A train load of Dunkards passed through the city last week bound for North Dakota points. They had with them their household goods, farming implements and stock ready to go to farming as soon as they reached their destination and they were a thrifty looking lot. Among the citizens who thronged the depot steps to interview them was a bibulously inclined individual whose eyes seemed suffused with tears of sympathy for the strangers when a brakey happened to catch on and says; "What's nippin' you? What are you weepin' at?" "Why," responded the other, "I was a thinkin' of the sad lot of these poor fellows for they tell me they are only Dunkards." "Well, never mind, old fel," said the brakey, "they are going to North Dakota, where they can soon add the r, if they want to. It's a prohibition state you know."

The Wilson Theater Co., in "A Noble Character," on Tuesday evening was greeted by a smaller house than on the evening before. We have no fault to find with the acting, which is fine, nor the actors, but if that piano thumper would manage to pound a trifle harder at times when something especially good is being said on the stage, probably he could prevent everybody in the audience from hearing a thing. As it is those occupying the boxes and the very front seats may possibly be able to hear a very little of what the actors are saying—but nobody else can. If the company would "give him a rest" he "never would be missed."

Hugh Thompson spent the Sabbath in the city, returning to Grand Forks on Monday morning. In conversation with the JOURNAL man Mr. Thompson said that he had over 300 acres in wheat Saturday night and would finish his seeding this week, the earliest for any season yet except the spring of '79 when he commenced sowing wheat on March 25th and had his wheat all sown by April 1st, but he only had 300 acres in that year. "If you will remember," he said, "we had a big snow in May, just what the crop needed, and we never had a better crop than we had that year. I dug down a few inches in my field last week and found that the ground is plenty moist enough to sprout the wheat, the frost is coming out slowly supplying plenty of moisture for the present and we do not really need any rain for a month yet, then if we get rain or snow we will be all right." Mr. T. will have 600 acres in wheat this year.

FOSSTON ITEMS

(From the Thirteen Towns.)

Rev. H. P. Fisher, of Crookston, arrived here on Tuesday's train and held services in the afternoon and evening, the later being well attended. The evening service was conducted party as a fellowship meeting, R. A. Hitchcock giving a short address on the "Relation of the Church to the Community," followed by an interesting discourse by Mr. Fisher. In an after meeting the reverend gentleman promised to use his influence to secure a regular pastor in the Congregational church in this city.

The United States Court, held at Fergus Falls last week, discharged Jno. Baumann and Wm. Tanner, of this place, who were indicted for selling liquor to Indians; Peter Jordan, of Red Lake, was convicted under the same charge. Several parties were convicted of stealing timber from government land.

Chief Douglass, of the timber examining corps, came down from Thief River Falls last week and took a tour of inspection through the camps on the White Earth reservation. A number of the estimators experienced difficulty in reaching the towns to which they were assigned, but all are now at work. Mr. Douglas returned to Thief River Falls on Tuesday.

Andrew Ophelm, of Fertile, was in town this week settling up the lumbering deal in which he was interested in the town of Columbia this winter. Everything was arranged satisfactory and he returned home yesterday.

STATE LEGISLATURE

TWENTY-NINTH BIENNIAL SESSION

Tuesday, April 2.

SENATE—The Stebbins smelting bill was killed after a warm debate.

H. F. 5, to regulate the use of pound nets in international waters, was passed under suspension of the rules, and a few bills were favorably recommended in committee of the whole.

HOUSE—The Wright census bill was the occasion of another squabble, though the contest over it was by no means as bitter and personal as at the time the original bill was acted upon adversely. The new bill carries an appropriation of $45,000, and provides for a simple enumeration of the people, and, incidentally, of the voters.

Among the bills passed were those to provide for a fourth insane asylum, and relating to drainage of wet lands.

Wednesday, April 3.

SENATE—Senator Hanna's bill S. F. No. 550 to provide for the election of the railroad and warehouse commissioners by the people, instead of by the governor's appointment, occupied the senate for an hour in the morning and was referred to the judiciary committee in order that there might be a full hearing, the bill to be reported back to the senate in 48 hours. Bills were passed relating to the practice of medicine and giving justices of the peace jurisdiction over offenses grow g out of illegal sale of liquor.

HOUSE—The house disposed of an immense amount of business and, besides passing a number of bills on the calendar, disposed of over 20 bills on general orders. Among those passed were bills relating to the regulation of labor; to amend the constitution relating to pardons and regarding proofs of publication of legal notices.

Thursday, April 4.

SENATE—In committee of the whole Mr. Foss' beet sugar bounty bill, which has already passed the house, was recommended for indefinite postponement, but by mutual consent was placed on general orders, and the bill providing for the establishment of two additional experiment stations was recommended for indefinite postponement.

The fish and game bill came up on a special order before the committee of the whole, and the rules were suspended and the bill was given its third reading, and the vote on the final passage of the bill stood 21 to 8.

Half a dozen house bills were passed, including the bills prohibiting the sale of tobacco to scholars in the public schools, and providing for the bonding of counties to build courthouses.

HOUSE—The feature of Thursday's session of the house was the fight over Mr. Sander's bill to prohibit the commitment of persons convicted of crime to any other than an institution under the direct control of the state. The bill as drawn is general in its provisions, though, as stated by a colleague of its author, it is aimed directly at the House of the Good Shepherd, in St. Paul. After one of the bitterest debates the house has had this session the bill was passed—69 to 27.

Friday, April 5.

SENATE—The hottest debate that has occurred in the senate for some time was indulged in during the afternoon when H. F. No. 20, Representative McGrath's drainage bill, came before the committee of the whole, on general orders. The discussion of the bill in committee lasted all the afternoon, and when the committee rose it was recommended to pass. The report was accepted, but a motion for the second and third readings of the bill and a vote on its final passage under a suspension of the rules failed to receive a two-thirds vote, and instead of being finally disposed of as the friends of the measure fully hoped it would, the bill will be up for further consideration on the calendar.

HOUSE—The only sensation of the house was the report of the Ives impeachment matter, which had been under consideration by the house judiciary committee for several weeks. The report was not unanimous, nine members favoring impeachment and eight opposing it.

Outside the judiciary committee the opinion seems to prevail that the house will support the minority report.

The following are among the bills passed:

Relating to mineral lands and reserving to the state all timber growing on such lands.

To provide elementary normal instruction in state high schools.

To provide a bounty for the arrest and conviction of chicken and poultry thieves.

To appropriate money for higher education and providing regulations for the disbursement of the same.

To encourage smelting iron ore and to conduct experiments with that end in view.

Relating to elections and providing regulations and restrictions looking to the prevention of fraud.

Saturday, April 6.

SENATE—House File 468, providing for the establishment of two additional agricultural experiment stations, was recommended to pass. Three normal school bills were also up and after some debate the bills were favorably reported. The locations for the schools are Glencoe, Litchfield and Pipestone.

HOUSE—The house put in nearly the entire day Saturday considering general orders in committee of the whole, and 32 bills were recommended to be placed on the calendar for final passage.

The bill changing the method of taxing iron companies was made a special order for Tuesday.

Feig's bill to lease the capitol lands in Kandiyohi county was favorably recommended.

Monday, April 8.

SENATE—S. F. 241 stirred up considerable discussion. It is Senator Potter's bill creating the office of county assessor. After a number of amendments had been attached, a motion that the bill be recommended for passage was first lost on a tie and then carried on a close vote. The bill is optional and does not disturb present city assessors.

S. F. 599 was killed. It is a bill regulating titles to real property by descent.

The woman suffrage bill was up in committee of the whole. It was referred to the judiciary committee for amendment.

HOUSE—On general orders the house killed the mineral land lease bill proposing a rebate on all ore from all school lands manufactured or smelted within the state.

The house spent the entire morning on general orders and a number of unimportant bills were acted on.

Senator Young's bill to forfeit the Hastings and Dakota land grant was the feature of the afternoon session. It was recommended to pass.

TOO MUCH SUGAR.

West India Committee of London Issues a Circular About It.

WASHINGTON, April 9.—Sir Julian Pauncefote, the British ambassador, has furnished to the department of state a copy of a circular issued by the West India committee of London concerning sugar production. The ambassador explains that it is not to be regarded as an expression of opinion by his government. The circular calls attention to the fact that the sugar industry, beet as well as cane, is passing through a crisis of the most serious description and expresses the hope that in attempting to provide a remedy the various governments should avoid any steps which may instead of relieving it. It is shown that while the production is increasing at the rate of a million tons per annum the consumption grows slowly at the rate of only 250,000 tons per annum. Naturally prices are depressed and the bounty system is ascribed as the cause of this state of affairs. Therefore, it advises the entire abolition of the bounty and the stimulation of consumption by the reduction of the duties levied on sugar, which are excessive in Europe, and prevent the people as a whole from using sugar.

PLACED UNDER ARREST.

Eight More Indicted New York Officials Before the Courts.

NEW YORK, April 8.—Eight men who were indicted by the extraordinary grand jury of the court of oyer and terminer have been placed under arrest.

George C. Clausen, formerly park commissioner, and at one time president of the department of public parks, and ex-Park Commissioner Nathan Straus, were the first to reach police headquarters. Police Captain Killilea arrived soon afterwards.

The next to reach headquarters was ex-Park Commissioner Abraham B. Tappen. He was followed shortly afterwards by the other indicted men, Patrolmen Hugh Cassidy, Edward F. Miley and John M. Thrall.

The prisoners remained in the building but a few minutes and then left for the office of the district attorney.

JAPAN'S PROPOSAL.

The Independence of Korea and Cession of Important Territory.

PARIS, April 10.—It is stated on reliable authority that Japan has proposed the following conditions for the conclusion of peace:

The independence of Korea, the cession of Southern Manchuria, including Port Arthur, the cession of the Island of Formosa, the opening of Chinese ports and rivers to commerce, the payment of an indemnity of 400,000,000 yen and the occupation of a number of strategic points until the indemnity shall have been paid.

ROBBERS GET AWAY.

Those Surrounded by a Hennessey Posse Escaped in the Night.

HENNESSEY, O. T., April 6.—The robbers who were surrounded by a posse, made their escape during the night and going to a preacher's house robbed him of valuables and two horses and made their escape. The preacher pursued and was later found on the prairie, riddled with bullets.

Have Fired the Plains.

WICHITA, Kan., April 10.—The Rock Island train robbers are now in the Gloss mountains region and have set the prairie on fire behind them in order to baffle their pursuers. There being a high wind the fires have covered an immense area of territory and the marshal's posse cannot advance.

FORTUNES IN FRUIT STANDS.

Big Money In Small Business by Economical Italians.

Few of the thoughtless passersby and chance patrons of the corner fruit stands on the city streets realize the comparatively large profits reaped by those who have their capital invested in this apparently insignificant business. To the average onlooker as he casts a careless glance at the vender of fruit and candy probably the only thought that occurs is that here is a poor unfortunate foreigner cast on our shores, who manages by this simple means to eke out a living for himself and a large family of small children. Indeed a closer inspection into the comfortless lives of these seekers for gain, involving long hours spent in continued application to work, the short remaining time passed in squalid homes or on the streets, would reveal little of the true state of affairs.

There is a vast difference in the indications from outward appearances. Some of them carry an air of prosperity in neatness of dress and carelessness of air. Others seem to wish to advertise their poverty by a show of tattered garments and generally destitute appearance. But in general those appearances are deceitful. The man in rags may ordinarily be regarded as more fortunate than his apparently prosperous brother. He is making more because it is not so much what is made in profits as what is saved, and in a small business, like that of the corner fruit dealers, this general principle is especially true.

The amount of the gains possible to the astute dealers is seen from a few examples of unusual prosperity. A short time ago an Italian who had been in the business on a down town corner for ten years closed out his business to a successor, receiving from him $2,200 for the privilege of his location. This amount he added to a fortune of $60,000 already accumulated. In the stockyards region a similar sale was made in consideration of $250. In the same neighborhood the death recently of a veteran in the business revealed the fact that he had been possessed of property amounting to $17,000. Some of our largest business blocks, notably on State and Halsted streets, are now owned by those who started in business in this way.—Chicago Journal.

MUCH DISFIGURED

INCOME TAX PARTIALLY KNOCKED OUT BY A DECISION.

Supreme Court Holds That Incomes From Rents, State, County and Municipal Bonds Cannot Be Taxed by the Federal Government — Otherwise the Law Is Good.

WASHINGTON, April 9.—After almost a month of deliberation the United States supreme court rendered its decision in the income tax cases, deciding by a divided court the law to be valid, except regarding the incomes derived from rents and from municipal bonds, on which point the decision was that the tax was unconstitutional.

The court's conclusions after reviewing the historical and other phases of the question were as follows:

1. That by the constitution federal taxation is divided into two great classes—direct taxes and duties, imposts and excises.

2. The imposition of direct taxes is governed by the rule of apportionment among the several states, according to numbers and the imposition of duties, imposts and excises by the rule of uniformity throughout the United States.

3. That the principle that taxation and representation together was intended to be and was preserved in the constitution by the establishment of the rule of apportionment among the several states, so that such apportionment should be according to numbers in each state.

4. That the states surrendered their power to levy imposts and to regulate commerce to the general government and gave it the concurrent power to levy direct taxes in reliance on the protection afforded by the rules prescribed, and that the compromises of the constitution cannot be disturbed by legislative action.

5. That these conclusions result from the text of the constitution, and are supported by the historical evidence furnished by the circumstances surrounding the framing and adoption of that instrument and the views of those who framed and adopted it.

6. That the understanding and expectation at the time of the adoption of the constitution was that direct taxes would not be levied upon the general government, except under the pressure of extraordinary exigency and such has been the practice down to Aug. 15, 1894. If the power to do so is to be exercised as an ordinary and usual means of supply, that fact furnishes an additional reason for circumspection in disposing of the present case.

7. That taxes on real estate belong to the class of direct taxes, and that the taxes on the rent or income of real estate, which is the incident of its ownership, belong to the same class.

8. That by no previous decision of this court has this question been adjudicated to the contrary of the conclusions now announced.

9. That so much of the act of Aug. 15, 1894, as attempts to impose a tax upon the rent or income of real estate without apportionment is invalid.

The court is further of opinion that the act of Aug. 15, 1894, is invalid so far as it attempts to levy a tax upon the income derived from municipal bonds. As a municipal corporation is the representative of the state and one of the instrumentalities of the state government, the property and revenues of municipal corporations are not subjects of federal taxation, nor is the income derived from state, county and municipal securities, since taxation on the interest therefrom operates on the power to borrow before it is exercised and has a sensible influence on the contract, and therefore such a tax is a tax on the power of the states and their instrumentalities to borrow money, and consequently repugnant to the constitution.

Upon each of the other petitions argued at bar, to-wit:

First—Whether the void provisions as to rents and incomes from real estate invalidates the whole act.

Second—Whether as to the income from personal property as such, the act is unconstitutional, as laying direct taxes.

Third—Whether any part of the tax, if not considered as a direct tax, is invalid for want of uniformity on either of the grounds suggested.

The justices who heard the arguments are equally divided and therefore no opinion is expressed.

The result is that the decree of the circuit court is reversed, and the case remanded with directions to enter a decree in favor of complainant in respect only of the voluntary payment of the tax on rents and income of its real estate, and that which it holds in trust, and on the income from the municipal bonds owned or so held by it.

The delivery of the opinion consumed just one hour. Chief Justice Fuller began at 12:05 and concluded at 1:05. He was followed by Justice Field, who read the first dissenting opinion, speaking in a low tone that contrasted noticeably with the loud delivery of the chief justice.

Justice Field's Opinion.

Justice Field's opinion was largely devoted to a review of the provisions regarding rents and was a vigorous denunciation of the principle sought to be established by the income tax law, his conclusions being in conformity with those announced by the chief justice.

Justice White followed Justice Field in another dissenting opinion.

Justice Harlan followed Justice White in a dissenting opinion, and the case was closed. Nothing was said to show how any of the justices stood, save those who read dissents.

Council Proceedings.

we should be alive to the best interests of the city, and should encourage both morally and financially the location here of manufacturing and other enterprises that give conclusive proof of resulting benefit to the city.

I would advise that the Council, if possible, take some steps to provide some place of recreation and innocent amusement for the rising generation, either in the shape of reading room, gymnasium, or otherwise and would also advise the passage of an ordinance prohibiting all children under a certain age from loafing around the streets or public place after a certain hour at night.

I would advise that you re-enact, codify, and consolidate your ordinances in order that the City may have some reliable authority governing its affairs.

In conclusion allow me to add that with no criticism of the past and with hope for the future, let us take the situation as we find it and by faithful service earn the gratitude of a people for a trust fulfilled and duty faithfully performed.

Gentlemen of the Council, remaining at all times subject to the commands of your honorable body, and with feelings of gratitude towards the numerous citizens of this community who have so kindly reposed confidence in me in selecting me to this high office, and trusting that I may be able to justify that confidence, I am,

Yours respectfully,
JOHN R. MCKINNON.

Mayor McKinnon then persented to the council for confirmation the following nominations:

For Comptroller, August George.
For City attorney, Martin O'Brien.
Putrolman No. 1, James Muir.
" " 2, Aaron Eck.

All the nominations presented by the mayor were duly confirmed by the council, except that of patrolman No. 2, Aaron Eck, action being deferred on this pending the settlement of the question whether or not a second patrolman is necessary at this time.

The minutes of the last regular meeting were then read and on motion of Ald. Childs, duly seconded the approval of the minutes was deferred with a view of objecting to their approval in part by the mover, his reasons he would present to the council later.

On motion the reading of the minutes of special meeting held April 6th was omitted.

Chief of Police presented his report on lights out, amounting to $53.46 for 1894. On motion same was accepted and ordered filed with the comptroller, to be used in making out orders for lights.

City attorney reported on the city justice's reports of L. E. Gossman and G. H. Holt as O. K. On motion same were referred to the finance committee.

Under the head of unfinished business Ald. Childs called the attention of the council to the fact that the council having established new grades on certain streets of the city city, never took any action to reconsider the action of the council fixing said grades at a previous time. The point was declared well taken by the chair.

Ald. Childs also represented to the council that the action taken at the last regular meeting with reference to the issuing of bonds of the city, was illegal, and for this reason objected to the approval of the minutes for said meeting. Ald. Watts raised the point of order that the question of whether the bonds were legally ordered issued or not had nothing whatever to do with the approving of the minutes; that if the clerk had properly recorded the action had by the council, the minutes should be approved and the legality of the bonds discussed afterwards. The chair sustained Ald. Watts in his opinion, and on motion the minutes for the last regular meeting were approved.

It was moved by Ald. Childs, seconded by Ald. Sawyer, that the rules be so far suspended as to allow the discussion of the bond question in connection with the action of the council authorizing the present issue of $10,000. Motion carried.

After discussing the question pro and con it was moved and seconded that the council reconsider the action of council had at the last regular meeting relative to the issuance of the bonds.

On the call of ayes and nayes the the vote stood as follows: Aldermen voting in the affirmative: Sawyer, Childs.

Aldermen voting in the negative: Buhn, Anderson; Morrisey, McGregor, Watts, Gervuis, Davis, Motz.

Upon this vote the motion was declared lost by the chair.

The bid of the board of sinking fund commissioners for the bonds was accepted.

It was moved and seconded that when council adjourn it adjourn to meet again on Tuesday April 16th, 1895. Motion carried.

On motion the city attorney was instructed to prepare his decision relative to the legality of the present bond issue, for the benefit of the board of sinking fund commissioners.

The bonds of William A. Lanctot, clerk, William Bloom, constable, John McLean, city justice and Ole O. Christianson, treasurer, were duly approved.

Bonds of G. H. Holt and A. Glenn were referred back for correction.

Bergquist Bros. made application to the council for liquor license. The clerk was instructed to have same published, setting date of hearing May 14th, 1895, at the regular meeting of the council.

The city engineer made report on contract with N. P. Stone for the grading of Broadway street between Fifth and Eighth streets, as being completed according to agreement, same amounting to $311.51. Report was referred to the finance committee.

The city engineer also made report of the Third Street sewer outlet, showing same to be in very good shape. On motion report was placed on file.

The city engineer made report of the compilation of the records in the city engineer's office, and the work done in said office since April 10th, 1894, for the inspection of the council.

The president of the council appointed Aldermen Watts, Morrisey and Childs as the finance committee for the ensuing year.

On motion council adjourned.

The Ratio of Size to Price.

"You don't want that $25 hat, Mary," said Mr. Muggins, who was with his wife in the milliner's store. "It's too big anyhow. Now, if the milliner could only take off four or five feathers it would be all right."

"That's easy," interposed the milliner sweetly, suiting the action to the word. "I take them off so—see? And there you have a love of a little bonnet."

And then, as Mr. Muggins felt for his pocketbook smilingly, thinking of the economy he had effected, she added, "Now it's only $50."—Chicago Tribune.

The Human Electrical Forces!

How They Control the Organs of the Body.

The electrical force of the human body, as the nerve fluid may be termed, is an especially attractive department of science, as it exerts so marked an influence on the health of the organs of the body. Nerve force is produced by the brain and conveyed by means of the nerves to the various organs of the body, thus supplying the latter with the vitality necessary to insure their health. The pneumogastric nerve, as shown here, may be said to be the most important of the entire nerve system, as it supplies the heart, lungs, stomach, bowels, etc., with the nerve force necessary to keep them active and healthy. As will be seen by the cut the long nerve descending from the base of the brain and terminating in the bowels is the pneumogastric, while the numerous little branches supply the heart, lungs and stomach with necessary vitality. When the brain becomes in any way disordered by irritability or exhaustion, the nerve force which it supplies is lessened, and the organs receiving the diminished supply are consequently weakened.

Physicians generally fail to recognize the importance of this fact, but treat the organ itself instead of the cause of the trouble. The noted specialist, Franklin Miles, M. D., LL. B., has given the greater part of his life to the study of this subject, and the principal discoveries concerning it are due to his efforts. Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine, the unrivaled brain and nerve food, is prepared on the principle that all nervous and many other difficulties originate from disorders of the nerve centers. Its wonderful success in curing these disorders is testified to by thousands in every part of the land.

Restorative Nervine cures sleeplessness, nervous prostration, dizziness, hysteria, sexual debility, St. Vitus dance, epilepsy, etc. It is free from opiates or dangerous drugs. It is sold on a positive guarantee by all druggists, or sent direct by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid.

NEEDED IMPROVEMENTS.

What We Should Encourage And What We Should Not.

Louis Fontains Gives The Journal A Few Practical Hints On The Subject.

Talking with Mr. Louis Fontaine one day last week, that gentleman advanced a few very practical ideas that the JOURNAL deems well worthy of serious consideration. In substance he spoke as follows: "I do not believe in this idea of going into hysterics over every proposition offered to our people for a bonus—there are some things we could well afford to pay a reasonable bonus for, but not indiscriminately. For instance you have heard much about the establishment of a potato starch factory here, what a good thing it would be for our farmers and all that. Now I don't believe that at all for the simple reason that the conditions for it are not right. In the fall our farmers have their hands so full handling their grain and doing their fall plowing that they would not have the time to dig and haul 10 or 15 acres of potatoes which would oblige them to wait till freeze up before hauling and that is risky. Under such a state of things a factory would be obliged to furnish sufficiently warm storage room for thousands of bushels which would be too expensive to be profitable. You will find in those localities where starch factories are sucessfully run that those who supply the potatoes raise little else. Again you have heard it said that a woolen factory would be a great thing for Crookston. Well, I don't agree with that proposition unless you can find a local market large enough to absorb the out-put of your mill for you could not sell such goods in competition with the large institutions of the United States. How was it with the Fergus Falls woolen mills? They went broke for the very reason I am giving you. We want a pork-packing establishment and it will pay us to encourage it. We also want wood manufactories of all kinds—something that will give employment to a great many people. Such things we can well afford to help establish.

DIED.

At the Soldiers Home at Minneapolis on Tuesday April 9th at 7:10 p. m., Capt. John Hunter, of Maple Bay, Polk county, and the remains were laid to rest at Lakewood on Thursday April 11th. John Hunter was born in Onondaga county New York on Feb. 8th 1830. He was educated at West Point and entered the regular service in 1856. He served during the entire period of the war of the rebellion in a Minnesota Reg't, the 51st we believe, as captain. After the war he served some time in Dakota. In 1866 he was married to Miss Elizabeth Bessley. Six children were born to them, five girls and one boy, all of whom survive him. In '68 or '69 he went to Washington, D. C., where he stayed a year or so when he came out on the line of the Northern Pacific, settling eventually at Detroit in Becker county, where he remained until the land office was removed from there to Crookston, in 1879, coming here with that institution. In 1883, he moved with his family to Maple Bay where he continued to live until about six years ago he was stricken with paralysis after which he was never able to attend to business of any kind. About four years ago he went to the Soldiers Home where he could have the needed attention of skilled physicians and trained nurses where he recovered suffcently to be able to return home for a visit several times. At the time he was stricken with paralysis he was at work upon an invention he had thought out and had patented—a safty switch, and it was almost ready for trial, in fact he had made all the arrangements to take it to St. Paul for trial but was obliged to give up the idea. By his kindly and genial disposition he had made many friends; indeed, all who knew Cap. Hunter liked him.

PLEAD GUILTY.

After The Verdict In The Grant Mason Case the Railroad Employee Cases Come to a Very Sudden End.

The railroad cases on trial at Fergus Falls last week were suddenly closed on Thursday and the court adjourned. After the verdict of guilty in the case of Grant Mason charged with obstructing the mails in the late Great Northern strike, the other Barnesville men under indictment for similar offenses pleaded guilty and were sentenced to pay a fine of $100 each, and until the fine was paid each was to be committed to the Otter Tail county jail. The sentence is not to become operative until moved by the district attorney. This is to allow the men to pay their fines in instalments. Several, however, paid in full and others paid half and will pay the rest before September. The men are Grant Mason, James E. Knowles, Robert Nelson, Thomas Pander, Fred Atkins, Chas. Malileux and Fred Ruth.

L. D. Foster, Paul Beaderean and William Broham, of St. Cloud, also pleaded guilty and were similarly sentenced. Subsequently the judge on request of the district attorney made the fine of Fred Rath, who is a mere boy, $10, and this was paid by the lad's father. There are now four cases against strikers at Barnsville, four at St. Cloud and four at Breckenridge undisposed of and they will undoubtedly plead guilty at a future term.

That Soap Factory.

Mention is elsewhere made of a new industry in town—a new soap factory established by Stahl & Funk. The JOURNAL is credibly informed, however, that on Tuesday Comrade Remshardt was called in to inspect a sample of the first batch of "soap" made, looked at it, then smelled of it and exclaimed excitedly: "By yimminy crismus, dot's no soap! Dot vas Limburger, only vants ten minutes more age; den he vas all right!"

THAT HUNT.

Louis Berguist and John Hanson arose at 2 a. m. on Tuesday morning and drove seven or nine miles north east in search of wild geese. Arriving at length at an isolated granery—several miles from nowhere in particular, they proceeded to hitch their horse to a 2x4 that was spiked onto the studding, and then they sat awhile till they heard some geese squawking then went out in the field to get the geese. They didn't get a whole lot of geese so they returned to the rig and just as they were about to clamber in the granary door suddenly opened and out came an irate granger who held in his hand an ugly looking revolver less than a rod long who commanded them in thunder tones to "halt!" Not having any more important business on hand just at that moment they concluded to "halt" and Louis blandly asked the farmer man what he wanted of them. "I'll show you what I want," responded the granger, it is not more than ten days ago that somebody stole a lot of wheat out of this granary and I have been sleeping in it ever since and you are the first chaps I have caught and I propose to take you fellows to town to interview a justice. That's what!" After awhile spent in arguing the case Louis managed to mollify the irate granger sufficently to be permitted to return to town with only John for company but he says it was a tight squeeze. It would not have been so funny if the boys had happened to have been after some wheat with a big lumber wagon as the granger meant business from the word go and was one of the kind who would just as soon shoot us to eat and he was mad from the ground up.

A DISLIKE OF DUKES.

A Handicap Which the Highest of English Peers Have to Carry.

We may note a peculiarity in the English feeling about titles of which we have never seen a reasonable explanation. The political populace dislikes the title of duke. Some of the ablest peers in politics have been dukes, but to be a duke weights instead of lightening a man in the great race for power. There is a widely diffused impression, the origin of which we cannot trace, that a duke is sure to be a little stupid, that a brilliant duke is, in fact, an impossibility. The title is a positive drawback to the Duke of Devonshire, and a Duke of Derby would never have been described as a "Rupert of debate."

The Duke of Argyll, who is an intellectual athlete, would have been far more completely recognized as Earl of Argyll, and we are not sure that the dukedom has not impeded one or two promising politicians in the house of lords. Certainly a duke rarely rises there unless he has become known to the country before the title crushed him. Is it that the rank overpowers the popular imagination till men cease to see the person—a thing which constantly happens in the case of kings—or is it that men can never forget the special rank by merging it in the simpler and more familiar title of "lord?"

No peer except a duke is invariably mentioned by the title which marks his grade. We have not an idea of the true explanation, but we know that a political earl who accepted a dukedom would lose heavily in popular estimation, and that even a marquis like Lord Salisbury, who would alter his rank so little, would find that the coronet of strawberry leaves acted, to a certain extent, as an extinguisher, while if his son never entered the house of commons he would have to struggle against some inexplicable weight. The fact is one of the very oddest in the whole of the odd history of the influence of rank, but of its reality we entertain no doubt whatever. To say "that is a ducal opinion" is to say it is an opinion that no one in our days need consider.—London Spectator.

Depew's Chicago Story.

Chauncey M. Depew has a story which he won't tell when he goes to Chicago. Here it is:

"There was once a prominent man in Chicago, who, like all others out there, had a very exalted opinion of his town. He died, and when he reached his eternal home he looked about him with much surprise and said to the attendant who had opened the gate for him: 'Really, this does great credit to Chicago. I expected some change in heaven.'

"The attendant eyed the Chicagoan a second, and then observed, 'This isn't heaven.'"—New York Telegram.

"In These Days Of Comfort and Convenience in Railway Train Services American people are apt to become a bit hardened and unappreciative. They are getting sort of calloused to luxury, so to speak, so that it takes something unusual to evoke words of praise. No more pointed example of the perfection of train service can be found anywhere than in the fine North-Western Limited.—Progressive Age Minneapolis, Minn.

THE IVES CASE.

FINISHED.

The House by a Vote of 80 to 17 Decides Against Impeachment.

GIVES GENERAL SATISFACTION.

On Thursday morning of last week, the judiciary committee submitted a majority and minority report, and a consideration of the reports was postponed till Friday evening, when they were taken up and discussed for several hours, and further consideration postponed until Monday evening of this week. On this subject the Monday evening Dispatch says:

"There is now small chance that a deciding vote will be reached by the house in the Ives case until near the middle of the week.

Tonight another session of the house is to be held and another attempt will be made to place some of the facts before it, but as formal legal arguments are to be given it may be expected that the meeting will be prosy and tedious. There are yet to be heard for the majority Messrs. J. D. Jones, Feig, Reeves and Littleton and the last named expects to consume an entire evening with the brief he is preparing. As may be expected he will consider the case from a legal standpoint and review in large part the evidence applying the law to the various incidents as they are taken up. Mr. Jones will devote himself entirely to the contempt proceedings with perhaps a reference to minor points. Who will sum up for the majority is not known, but who ever does so, will probably attempt nothing more than a very brief review of the case, and in addition the reasons for the findings of the committee.

As the facts in the case develop the impossibility of getting the evidence before the house becomes more apparent. The committee spent three weeks solid in hearing the testimony and the amount already transcribed would require several days to read.

For the minority reports, arguments are to be made on one evening by Messrs. Cant and Schurmeler, and on another by Messrs. Scofield and Gibbs. As both of the first named are lawyers, they will presumably lay down the law in this case, while Messrs. Gibbs and Scofield confine themselves to facts.

The closing speech for the minority will probably be made by Mr. Douglass."

Contrary to the opinion expressed above, the House did reach a vote on the question and it was favorable to Judge Ives, standing 80 to 17. The Dispatch of Tuesday says:

"The house of representatives did one of the best pieces of work at the night session last night that has been done since the legislature has met, and that was, by a vote of 80 to 17, deciding not to put the state to a very great expense by the impeachment and trial of Judge Frank Ives, of the Fourteenth judicial district. The careful work of the judiciary committee in investigating the questions involved in the charges against him was not entirely lost time and labor, because it put at rest much of the clamor that was raised and showed the real character of the offenses with which he was charged. It discloses, too, the fact that there is much in his conduct as a judge that is not very consistent with the judicial office, and it may, perhaps, do some good all around in acting as a salutary lesson to him and others in a like position, and suggesting to him and them that the position of a judge has attached to it serious responsibilities for which the people's representatives are at all times ready to hold them to a rigid accounting. Whether the acts complained of were mere irregularities or something more serious, it is to be hoped now that the escape that Judge Ives has made will be a caution to him for the future and until the close of his term. It is very evident, from the amount of money needed for an infinite number of other purposes, that the people could not well spare the $100,000 or more that an impeachment trial, in all its incidents, would have cost. The money is badly needed for other purposes, and the good that could be done by an impeachment and trial, under the circumstances, would not have counterbalanced the great expenditure that would have been necessary. The investigation which has been had will probably do as much good as to have entered upon a trial with all the chances of an acquittal for want of a two-thirds vote of the senate necessary to convict. All personal animosities that have been aroused by this whole business, from first to last, should now be laid aside. No good can come of prolonging them any further on either side. The house is entitled to the thanks of the people for saving them from a great expense, the result of which, from the first, was problematical."

Coming Attractions.

The Great Northern Scenic Co., of Minneapolis, will be here on Friday and Saturday evenings, April 19 and 20, to give its fine art entertainment, "America's Beautiful Scenery," at the opera house. A large number of new colored views have recently been added to the collection handled by the company, making a very complete trip from Chicago to Alaska, as also many new ones through the mountain regions of Montana and Washington. During the winter and spring the company has been entertaining crowded houses in the cities of Southern Minnesota and Wisconsin, and with great satisfaction everywhere. Scores of papers endorse the entertainment in such expressions as: "The most interesting places were pictured with wonderful accuracy and shown up in a manner that held the audience in close attention."—The audience was spellbound in admiration of the magnificent view's of America's wonderland. The mammoth pictures were almost a reality."—"We must say it was the finest thing of the kind we ever witnessed. The management of this company have spent much time and money in gathering so fine a collection of views, but the enjoyment evinced by their audiences is reward for their labors."

At Grand opera house, April 19 and 20. Prices only 10, 15 and 25 cents. No one should miss it.

The character of Professor Jacob Kreitzmeyer and O'Donover Duff, the Two Old Cronies, are assumed by Mr. John B. Wills and Mr. Eddie Bowers in Wills' New "Two Old Cronies" this year. Mr. Wills has the stellar role, and as a German dialect comedian is said to be extremely funny. There is no question about his stage appearence, because he has been so long before the American public that everybody knows him. Under the revisions he has made in the piece this year he is said to be more clever and funnier than ever. The New "Two Old Cronies" is very droll and witty in dialogue, extremely amusing and laughable in action, and its production means a continual roar of laughter until the curtain falls on the last act. The picnic-grounds scene in the second act gives every member of the company an opportunity to display his particular talent, and as the very best specialty features are necessary, the people surrounding Mr. Wills must be artists. In all the Eastern cities this season, and throughout the South and West, the New "Two Old Cronies" has been extremely successful. In Kansas City, Omaha, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, and St. Paul, the press has spoken very highly of the performance, and with these endorsements behind the "Two Old Cronies," the engagement of that popular farce comedy in this city at the Grand Opera House on Tuesday the 23 and should be a rousing success.

CLEVELAND WRITES

A LETTER IN ANSWER TO AN INVITATION TO CHICAGO.

He Makes a Plea For Sound Money, Alleging the Poor Would Be the First to Suffer From the Proposed Changes of the Silver Party.

CHICAGO, April 17.—The business men and citizens of Chicago who invited President Cleveland to visit Chicago to attend a reception in his honor on account of his attitude on the financial question are to be disappointed. A reply to the invitation has been received and is in part as follows:

I am much gratified by the exceedingly kind and complimentary invitation you have tendered me on behalf of many citizens of Chicago to be their guest at a gathering in the interest of sound money and wholesome financial doctrine. My attachment to this cause is so great and I know so well the hospitality and kindness of the people of Chicago that my personal inclination is strongly in favor of accepting your flattering invitation, but my judgment and my estimate of the proprieties of my official place oblige me to forego the enjoyment of participating in the occasion you contemplate. I hope, however, the event will mark the beginning of an

to disseminate among the people safe and prudent financial ideas. What is now needed more than anything else is a plain and simple presentation of the argument in favor of sound money. In other words, it is a time for the American people to reason together as members of a great nation which can promise them a continuance of protection and safety only so long as its solvency is unsuspected, its honor unsullied and the soundness of its money unquestioned. In these restless days the farmer is tempted by the assurance that though our currency may be debased, redundant and uncertain, such a situation will improve the price of his products. Let us remind him that he that his dreams of plenty are shaded by the certainty that if the prices of the things he has to sell is nominally enhanced the cost of the things he must buy will not remain stationary; that the best prices which cheap money proclaim are unsubstantial and elusive, and that even if they were real and palpable he must necessarily be left far behind in the race for their enjoyment. It ought not to be difficult to convince the wageearner that if there were benefits arising from a degenerated currency they would reach him least of all and last of all. In an unhealthy stimulation of prices an increased cost of all the needs of his home must long be his portion while he is at the same time vexed with vanishing visions of increased wages and an easier lot.

If reckless discontent and wild experiment should sweep our currency from its safe support the most defenseless of all who suffer in that time of distress and national discredit will be the poor.

J. W. SCOTT DEAD.

One of the Foremost Newspaper Man of the Day Passes Away.

NEW YORK, April 17.—James W. Scott, proprietor of the Chicago Times-Herald and the Chicago Evening Post, died at 3 p. m. at the Holland House, this city, while on his way to Old Point Comfort, Va. His death was very sudden. He was taken with pains in the left side during the morning and a doctor was called. He said the pain arose from the passage of a stone from the bladder, and administered morphine. At 1 o'clock Mr. Scott became unconscious and the doctor was hastily summoned again. He found that apoplexy had supervened, probably brought on from the pain, and Mr. Scott died without recovering consciousness. Mrs. Scott and a little niece were the only relatives with him.

Not In the Line of Duty.

WASHINGTON, April 10.—Assistant Secretary Reynolds of the interior department has affirmed a decision of the pension office refusing to allow a pension to a man receiving a gunshot wound while on a veteran furlough, as not in the line of duty.

FOUND THE NORTH POLE.

Rumor That Nansen Has Planted the Norwegian Flag There.

PARIS, April 16.—The Figaro gives currency to a rumor that Dr. Nansen, the Arctic explorer, has found the north pole and that it is situated on a chain of mountains. It is also said that Dr. Nansen planted there the Norwegian flag. The story is regarded as without foundation in truth.

Would as Soon Be Hanged.

CHICAGO, April 16.—Maggie Teller, the colored woman who was convicted of murder, has declined to accept Judge Clifford's offer to grant her a new trial on condition that she plead guilty and her sentence be reduced to life imprisonment. "I would as leave be hanged as to go to Joliet for life," said she. If she clings to her determination to refuse to plead guilty Judge Clifford will be forced to pronounce the death sentence upon her.

Crowds After Chamberlain Lands.

CHAMBERLAIN, S. D., April 16.—In accordance with the proclamation of forfeiture, the lands originally granted to the Milwaukee road for right of way across the ceded Sioux lands to the Black Hills, have been opened. There was an immense crowd of would-be homesteaders around the United States land office all day.

More Chicora Wreckage.

CHICAGO, April 16.—A large piece of the forward bulwarks of the wrecked steamer Chicora was picked up about 15 miles northeast of Chicago. The monogram "G. and M." of the Graham & Morton line was on the portion of the bulwarks. The lake for a mile round the spot was strewn with wreckage, but no sign of any bodies were seen.

WOULD EXCOMMUNICATE THEM.

Langevin Warns Manitoba Catholics Against Favoring State Schools.

WINNIPEG, Man., April 16.—A number of Manitoba Roman Catholics, among them several prominent people, have in the struggle now going on for the re-establishment of Catholic parochial schools, sided with the national school party, and one of these went so far as to go to Ottawa to give evidence before the Canadian privy council on behalf of the continuance of a national school system. The newly consecrated Archbishop Langevin spoke from the pulpit of St. Mary's, the leading Catholic church, and created a sensation by declaring that those Catholics who henceforth lent their influence or aid to the opponents of Catholic parochial schools would be excommunicated.

It is reported that a special encyclical from Rome has been received by the Manitoba bishops on the school question, hence the announcement by Archbishop Langevin.

Compels Clergy to Keep Quiet.

MONTREAL, April 16.—Archbishop Fabre has issued a pastoral letter, in which he commands the clergy to keep silent when in the pulpit on the Manitoba school question, but recommends them to express to their parishioners who ask the delight of the episcopacy at the action taken thus far in the matter by the Conservative government.

WASHINGTON, April 13.—The president has made these appointments:

Interior—George W. Myers, register of the land office at Miles City, Mon.; A. B. Reeves, receiver of public moneys at Dodge City, Kan.

Mineral land commissioners for the Helena land district in Montana—Edward H. Movious of Buffalo, Miles Cavanagh of Helena, and Lyman E. Barnes of Appleton, Wis.

Mineral land commissioners for Missoula land district in Montana—William Harrison of Georgetown, Ga.; F. M. Leonard of Libbey, Mon.; William V. Tompkins of Prescott, Ark.

Mineral land commissioners for Bozeman land distrsct in Montana—James A. Johnson of Bozeman, Mon.; Bishop P. Blackwell of Florida.

Mineral land commissioners for Cœur d'Alene district, Idaho—Addison Crain of Harrison, Ida.; Wallace McLaurin of Jackson, Miss.; Albert J. Pearson of Woodfield, O.

THE YANKTON RESERVE.

It Will Probably Be June 1 Before It Is Opened to Settlement.

SIOUX FALLS, S. D., April 16.—In an interview Register Boynton of the Mitchell land office, said that there was hardly any probability of the Yankton reservation being opened before June 1. He says the whole thing is hanging fire on account of Commissioner Lockhart's demand that the state be allowed to file on 50,000 acres before the settlers get a chance at the land. Mr. Boynton says that the report that the reservation will be opened immediately with the proclamation of the president is all nonsense. He says that at all times in the history of this country no lands have been opened to settlement without giving at least 30 days notice by presidential proclamation. It will be at least two weeks more before the proclamation will be issued, and 30 days after that will make the season so late that the settlers cannot raise anything but corn and flax.

CAN'T PAY THE TAX.

Siegel, Cooper & Co., of Chicago, Enjoined by Judge Schowalter.

CHICAGO, April 16.—In the United States court Judge Showalter enjoined Siegel, Cooper & Co. from making any return to the internal revenue collector under the provisions of the income tax law. The restraining order was granted on a bill filed by Gerson Siegel, one of the New York stockholders in the defendant corporation. The bill attacks the law and under the order the government will be compelled to take part in the proceedings to defend the operation of the law.

Copies of the Rehearing Petition.

WASHINGTON, April 16.—Copies of the petition asking a rehearing of the income tax question were handed around to members of the United States supreme court. There were no proceedings in open court. No action has been taken on it as yet.

Justice Jackson Cannot Sit.

WASHINGTON, April 16.—A letter has been received here from Justice Jackson, saying he would not be able to come to Washington this term. This makes it beyond question that a rehearing of the income tax case, if ordered, cannot occur before next October.

HALF THE TOWN GONE.

Dorchester, Wis., Visited by a Destructive Fire.

MILWAUKEE, April 15.—News has just reached here that Dorchester, a small town on the Wisconsin Central railroad in Clark county, was swept by fire and nearly one-half of the business portion destroyed. The total loss is $30,000.

Favor Minnetonka.

WINNIPEG, April 13.—The annual meeting of the Minnesota and Winnipeg Rowing association will be held here Tuesday. The place of the next regatta will be decided and it is probable that Minnetonka will be selected. The Winnipeg vote will go that way if nothing occurs in the meantime to change it.

Will Hold a Conference.

DOVER, Del., April 16.—One ballot was taken for a United States senator. It resulted as follows: Higgins, 9; Addicks, 5; Massey, 4; Pennewill, 1; Bayard, 1; Ridgely, 9. A conference will be held between Higgins, Massey and Addicks looking to a settlement of the senatorial deadlock.

SAFETY IN WEARING A BEARD.

It Guards the Throat and Is a Protection Against Facial Paralysis.

It is to be feared that too many deprive themselves of what Shakespeare calls "valor's excrement" without counting the possible cost. Whether the beard be an ornament to the masculine countenance we must leave the ladies to decide. It certainly has its uses in hiding a weak chin, and in some cases it seems to be cultivated as a vicarious compensation for a hairless scalp. It is not, however, in its cosmetic so much as in its hygienic aspects that the blessedness of the beard—in which term we include the whole of the harvest usually claimed by the razor—is most apparent. That it is a safeguard to the throat is generally admitted. The writers of authority have insisted on its value as a protection against toothache and facial neuralgia. This is a goodly sum of advantages to the credit of the beard.

Dr. Chabbert of Toulouse has, however, yet more to say in its favor. According to this practitioner, the beard seems to be a very efficient defense against that form of facial paralysis which is caused by cold. This affection is far more common in women than in men, though the latter are of course much more exposed to the cause which produces it. When facial paralysis a frigore does occur in men, they are almost invariably individuals to whom nature has been stepmotherly in the matter of beard or have wantonly thrown away the protective covering with which she had clothed their faces. Dr. Chabbert cites the experience of several physicians, in addition to his own, in support of his opinion. Professor Andre of Toulouse has seen several cases of the affection in question in women, but not one in man. He had heard of one indeed which would appear to be an excellent example of the exception which proves the rule, for the patient was a "lyric artist," with the [illegible] so distasteful to Lord Byron. Professor Pitres of Bordeaux has seen 12 cases in women and only two in men. Both the latter shaved, though as one of them underwent that operation only twice a week his case perhaps does not count for much unless it be held that his face was more vulnerable after these periodical denudations. Similar observations are quoted from Dr. Olivier of Toulouse and Dr. Sade of [illegible].

These facts, though hardly sufficient to found an induction on, seem at least to establish a prima facie case for the utility of the beard against facial paralysis of the kind referred to. In these days, when man's traditional privileges are one by one being invaded by the "new woman," he may perhaps be forgiven for making the most of such advantages as may be considered exclusively his own.—British Medical Journal.

Corn Is Necessary For Poultry.

Corn is a necessity for poultry, no difference what a few amateurs say. They only echo the theory of some fellow who is only a breeder on paper. The fellows who write so glibly about corn being such a bad thing for fowls never made actual experiment in their lives to ascertain whether corn was good or bad. They are merely "talking through their hats." Let these theorists conduct a series of practical experiments for several years with corn and other grains, and then, and not till then, will they know what they are talking about. Intelligent breeders are tired of the talk on corn by mere theorists, with no practical experience on the subject

CHAPTER XX.

CASHIERED.

The cheer, the shriek, Miss Fitz Hugh's words, sounded in Colonel Maynard's ears as he put spurs to his horse and dashed away up the stream in a direction parallel with the Union lines. The cheer was the announcement of the completion of an act by which he had parted with what he held most dear—the confidence of his superiors, his peers and the rank and file of the army. He had given to Caroline Fitz Hugh to see the rising of the sun whose light was now broadening in the east. He had called down upon himself what to him was the bitterest of all degradation, perhaps to meet the fate that had been intended for her. Riding up the creek on the bank nearest the Confederate lines, he approached a wood. This he entered, crossed the creek unobserved and emerged to see the men by whom the escaping party had been chased returning toward the ridge. Not caring to be questioned by them, he rode back into the wood until they were in a position not to see him. Then he trotted slowly to the ridge and over it, making his way back to his tent.

It was new broad daylight. As he dismounted he noticed a detachment of cavalry marching on foot, under the direction of an officer, toward the house where Miss Fitz Hugh had been confined. On arriving there they halted, and the officer went inside. In a few minutes he came out and strode over to Colonel Maynard's tent. The colonel had gone in. He had thrown off his cavalry jacket and was waiting for what was to follow. The officer entered the tent, and not recognizing Maynard, shorn of his beard, asked for the colonel commanding.

"I am Colonel Maynard."

"Ah! I did not recognize you, colonel. I have just called for the spy in the house where I expected to find her and was told by the sergeant that he had delivered her soon after midnight to two men bearing an order from you."

"Well?"

"I suspect something must be wrong. Was the order a forgery?"

"No."

"Then the prisoner is in your keeping?"

"No."

"Escaped?"

"Yes."

The officer was too astonished to ask any more questions at once.

"Who is responsible?" he asked presently.

"I am."

"You?"

"Yes, I. You will march your men back to camp. You need not make any official report of the matter unless you choose. I will report the escape myself."

The officer bowed, and with the same astonishment on his face that had been there throughout turned from the tent, and going to the men standing in the road marched them back to camp.

Colonel Maynard came out of his tent, and mounting his horse rode to the headquarters of his division commander. He rode slowly, his head bowed almost to his saddlebow. Reining up before the general's tent, he sent in his name by an orderly, and was soon admitted.

"General," he said, "I have come to prefer charges."

"Indeed," said the general. "Why not forward them in writing in the regular way?"

"It is because of the person against whom I am going to prefer them."

"And that is?"

"Myself."

The general looked at him with a puzzled expression.

"Colonel, are you ill?"

"No, general."

"I suppose it would be ridiculous to ask a man if he is all right here?" and he tapped his forehead with his finger.

"I am sound of mind and body."

"Well, well, colonel, what does it all mean? It's too early in the morning for joking," and the general yawned.

"I have to report that the spy left in my charge has escaped and through my connivance."

"Good Lord!" exclaimed the general. "That is a serious matter."

Maynard remained silent.

"And the explanation?"

"There is none."

The general looked into the melancholy eye of Colonel Maynard and felt a cold chill creep over him. He knew there was some reason for the act which would explain if not excuse it.

"Colonel, you are a dashing fellow, with a tinge of romance in your nature. I trust you have not yielded to an absurd notion as to taking the life of a woman."

"No. I have not."

"Then give me some explanation. I fear it will go hard with you, but I will do all I can for you if you can give a satisfactory reason."

"I have no reason to give."

"Of course I must report the matter. Better speak now. It may be too late hereafter."

"I have reported the fact. That is all the report I have to make."

"Then, colonel, it is my duty to order you to your tent under arrest. You may leave your sword here with me, if you please. An order will be issued placing Colonel ——, next in rank, in charge of your brigade."

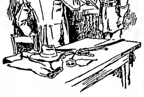
Colonel Maynard unhooked his sword from his belt and handed it to the general. Then he rode back to his tent, and as he entered it he felt that he had left his former self outside; that, as in the case of a fallen comrade, he would never see this being of the past again. As for his present self, that, if suffered to live could only live a life in death.

A court martial was convened to try Colonel Maynard with as much dispatch as had attended the trial of the escaped woman. The charge was "giving aid and comfort to the enemy," the specification "himself aiding in the escape of a spy in the service of said enemy."

The court met on the afternoon of the day on which Maynard had reported his act. Men of his own grade, or near it, sat about a pine table in a wall tent and proceeded with the formalities attending the case. As Maynard pleaded guilty to both charge and specification there was little to do except to come to a verdict. Before doing so the president asked the accused if he had anything to say in his behalf, any explanation to make.

"No," was his reply.

"Colonel Maynard," said the president, "you have served this army with distinction. You have been respected, trusted, beloved as few other men in it. You have confessed to having committed one of the most atrocious crimes that can come under the jurisdiction of a military court. Nothing can excuse it. There may be something to palliate it. I conjure you to speak before the court brings in a verdict and names your punishment."



Colonel Maynard unhooked his sword.

"Mr. President," replied Maynard, "for my act toward this army I am accountable to you as a court martial convened to try me; for my act as one of right or wrong, of honor or dishonor, I am accountable only to a tribunal with which you have nothing to do. Do not waste valuable time. Before the sun sets twice, if I mistake not, you will have a more important work to do in the reception of the enemy. Do your duty as a court, and do it with dispatch."

There was not an officer present but looked at Maynard with a curious admiration. It was plain that he had sacrificed himself, though it was not entirely plain why. Even those who condemned him most bitterly seemed to hesitate to bring in a verdict which would naturally carry with it the punishment of death.

"You are mistaken, colonel," said one of them, referring to Maynard's predictions. "The enemy have been in full retreat ever since we left Murfreesboro. I only fear he's going to give us the slip again."

"I regret your confidence, sir," replied Maynard. "I am aware that others feel as you do, and it is a mistake which will cost this army dear."

"Nonsense. Haven't we"—

"This is not the place to discuss problems for which only our commanding general is responsible," interrupted the president. "Let the prisoner leave the court."

Maynard was led away, and the court proceeded to consider a verdict. There was little time spent on it, for there was but one thing to do, and that was to make it "guilty of the charge and guilty of the specification." Then began a discussion of the punishment. One of the members stated that it was personally known to him for a fact that the accused had one year before visited Chattanooga as a spy, when the place was held by the Confederates, had been captured, tried, condemned and sentenced to be hanged; that Jacob Slack, a boy who was now serving as his orderly, had been with him; that he had contrived to get news of Maynard's condition to Missouri Slack, his sister, at Jasper, Tenn.; that she had gone to Chattanooga, had entered his jail, had exchanged clothes with the prisoner and thus effected his escape; that he had been concealed and afterward helped through the lines by a Miss Fain, whom he had married on reaching the Union lines.

"I put it to you, gentlemen," he concluded, "could one whose life had been saved by women carry out a sentence of death upon a woman for the same offense for which it was intended he should suffer?"

The speaker knew nothing of the relations existing between Maynard and Fitz Hugh. It is impossible to know what might have been the effect had he possessed this knowledge. The court acted only on the information communicated by the officer who told the story of Maynard's experience as a spy, and the main facts in this were known throughout the army. The circumstances of the accused's sentence by Confederates to be hanged for a spy and his escape, the valuable service he had rendered the Union cause, the reasons he had for not wishing to shoot a woman, saved his life. The sentence of the court was that he be dismissed the service, with forfeiture of all pay and emoluments.

When this sentence was communicated to Colonel Maynard, he was in his tent, waiting to know his fate. He had expected to be shot. He hardly knew whether he was more moved by the leniency shown him or more disappointed at being obliged to live a disgraced man. But one reason gave him comfort that he was not to die—his wife. He knew that, although all others looked upon him with horror, she would love him all the more that he suffered.

CHAPTER XXI.

A MILITARY PROBLEM.

The events attending the capture and escape of Caroline Fitz Hugh and the dismissal of Colonel Maynard from the service all happened in such quick succession that Jakey Slack was not aware of what was taking place until after it was all over. It must be confessed that Maynard had not treated his most devoted adherent with the consideration he merited. But it is the way of people who are rising to eminence to gradually leave off familiarity with those formerly most intimate with them.

Maynard had treated Jakey with mock deference, but had not thought of leaning upon him for advice or strength, much less comfort, and during the raging of the fire through which he had passed Jakey Slack had been as far from his mind as if he had not existed.

One evening as "retreat" was sounding—it was the evening of the colonel's deposition from his rank and command—Jakey walked into his tent. Maynard's head was bowed down on his camp cot. Hearing some one enter, he looked up and saw his old friend. Had Jakey been another boy, when he saw the haggard look, the strongly marked lines of suffering in the face before him, he would have shown some mark of the effect such a sight had upon him. Not so Jakey. There was no expression either of surprise or grief upon his unexpressive countenance. But the sight of Jakey standing there to remind him that, though a whole army condemned him, there was one in it who never could be brought to think him guilty of any crime had a different effect on the late commander. He reached out his hand, took that of Jakey, and, drawing the boy toward him, folded him in his arms. Thus do those who have been deprived of their greatness go back for sympathy to those from whom they have farthest departed.

Maynard held the boy against his breast while he gave way to convulsive sobs such as are unusual in a man and only come when some mental struggle under an intense grief is relaxed and suffering permitted to get control. Neither spoke. Jakey's presence reminded Maynard the more keenly of those he loved. His mind had been upon his wife and child. Jakey's coming brought also Souri's image and the trials and triumphs which he and Jakey and Souri had once passed together, and trials and triumphs borne in company weld hearts. Of all who loved him only Jakey was there, and on him alone could he rely for comfort.

At last Jakey withdrew himself from his friend's embrace. He had permitted him to indulge his grief for a few minutes, and this he considered quite long enough.

"General," he began. He had always called his chief "general," contending that he was a general since he commanded a brigade.

"No more of that, Jakey. I am only Maynard now—Mark Maynard. Mark is a good enough name for me."

"Waal, that don't make no differ. You uns got th' same body 'n arms 'n legs 'n all thet. Hev y' done th' fust thing fo' ter do?"

"What's that, Jakey?"

"Tell Mrs. Maynard."

"Jakey, I can't."

"Reckon she'll hev ter know it some time."

"There's going to be a battle. No court can keep me from shouldering a musket or wielding a saber. I'll go into the fight that's coming and never come out of it. Then she'll not need to know it."

"What makes y' think ther's goin ter be a fight?"

"I would not have the intuitions of a soldier if I did not."

"Y' hain't General Rosey."

"Nor do I need to be General Rosey to divine what's coming. Do you suppose I know any more about war with eagles on my shoulders than in a private's uniform? If there were some superior being to look into the heads of the men composing this army and readjust the rank in accordance with fitness, many a star would leave the shoulder where it now rests to alight on that of some obscure private."

"Waal, ef we fight 'em, won't we whip 'em?"

Jakey noticed that, with the change of his friend's mind from his grief to war, there was an immediate improvement from the terrible depression upon him. He asked the question for the purpose of keeping Maynard's attention fixed for a time on war rather than for information.

"Whip 'em? Why, Jakey, we're scattered all over creation." He dipped his finger in a tin cup full of water and began to draw a rude map on the top of an extemporized table, consisting of a square board nailed on a stake driven in the ground.

"Here's the Chickamauga flowing between these two ridges, Missionary and the Pigeon mountains, from south to north into the Tennessee. Crittenden's corps is here at Lee and Gordon's mill. Thomas' corps has just passed through Stevens' gap down here, ten or a dozen miles from Crittenden, while McCook is at Alpine, 20 miles away from Thomas. We are off here near Reed's bridge, the tip of the left wing, 40 miles from McCook, the tip of the right wing.

"Bragg is here at Lafayette, on the east side of the Pigeon mountains, and opposite our center at Crawfish Springs, where he can strike any one of our corps separately. He can ride up on to the Pigeon mountains, and, looking down on the valley of the Chickamauga, see just where we are located. I was up there myself the other day with a reconnoitering party and came upon one of his scouts, looking at us very much as one would survey a barnyard of fat turkeys before Christmas."

He paused and seemed lost in some attendant problem. Presently he added absently:

"All I'd be afraid of would be delay."

"What d'y' mean by thet?" asked Jakey.

Maynard started. "I was thinking that I was on the other side," he said. "You see, Jakey, in a military point of view the beauty of the situation is all with the Confederates."

"How?"

"They can cut us up in detail."

"Wha'd y' do ef y' wor him uns?"

"I? I'd drive a wedge right in here between Thomas' and Crittenden's corps. I'd destroy first one and then the other. After that I'd eat my rations and have plenty of time to take care of McCook's, which is too far away even to hear the guns."

"Thet'ud be hunky," said Jakey, pretending to catch his friend's enthusiasm. "Pity 'twasn't t'other way 'n we had 'em as they got we uns. Mebbe ef you uns wor in command of our army y' mought do somep'n fo' ter change th' siteration."

"I?"

"Yes, what'd y' do?"

"That's a poser, Jakey."

Maynard studied his improvised map for awhile without speaking, as if it were a chessboard. At last he said:

"General Rosecrans, I learn, has ordered his scattered columns concentrated at Crawfish Springs, the center of his line. Perhaps this is as good a plan as any, at least if Bragg gives him time enough to close up. To me two plans seem to be open. One is to demonstrate along the Chickamauga, principally with cavalry, while"—

"What's demonstrate?" interrupted the listener.

"Make a feint, a fuss; pretend to have a big force and only have a little one. I would leave the campfires burning at night, to make them think I was still there, and draw my army away to Mission ridge. Moving backward on converging lines"—

"What's them?"

"Lines coming to a focus"—

"What's a focus?"

"Confound it, Jakey, we'll be attacked and whipped before I can make you understand. These roads you see come together at Chattanooga. From Chattanooga, if necessary, the army could be crossed"—

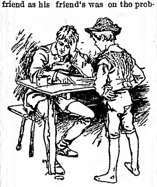
"I thought we uns was a-follerin them uns!" observed Jakey, surprised at the turn the campaign had taken.

"Jakey, did you ever hear of the man who held his adversary down by placing his nose between that adversary's teeth?"

"No."

"Well, that's the way we're holding our enemy, but your remark leads to the other side of the problem. Desperate diseases require desperate remedies. If I were a general, I'd never be on the defensive if I could help it, cost what it might. It sets a man to wondering what his enemy is going to do, instead of doing something himself. Now, our southernmost column might be pushed out here"—putting his finger on the line denoting the Georgia Central railroad—"to cut the Confederates' avenue for supplies. Bragg might turn and crush it, but he can do that now. The trouble is, Jakey, we need troops for quick marches; flying columns to move without camp equipage. Such a column down there could strike, retreat, strike at another point, and so confuse an enemy that he wouldn't know what was to happen next."

Jakey was too young to understand the phases of the war problem in which Maynard's mind had become engrossed to the obliteration of his trial, disgrace, wife, child, friends, comrades, everything but the game that charmed him. But Jakey's mind was as much on his friend as his friend's was on the problem, and he determined to go on fostering the awakened interest. Unmindful of the demonstration made thus far, he suddenly broke out:



Jakey was puzzled.

"Supposin I wor th' general commandin this hyar army 'n you uns wor th' general commandin t'other army. Now, how would it do fo' me ter march out in the middle o' the night 'n just knock the stuffin right out'n you uns?"

Maynard smiled. It suddenly occurred to him how little Jakey knew of the game of war; how useless had been his explanations.

"What would be your plan of attack, general?" he asked, wishing to humor the boy.

"Waal," said Jakey, who had no more idea of what he was talking about than the 14-year-old boy he was, "I reckon I'd put the big guns in a long line on top o' th' Pea Vine ridge hyar, 'n jest scatter shot 'n shell like chicken feed."

Maynard burst into a laugh. Jakey surveyed the altered expression of his friend's face with his bright little eyes and chuckled, but his own face was as imperturbable as usual.

"General," said the boy commander's supposititious enemy, "what would you do if I were to draw my troops out of range?"

Jakey was puzzled. He made a desperate effort to conjure up a reply.

"Waal," he said presently, "I reckon I'd jest wait fo' you uns ter do somep'n."

"Your ground would be strong enough in itself, but weak on the flanks, especially your left, and in case of retreat you would have the creek to cross in face of an enemy, a hazardous undertaking. I would turn your left and get possession of the roads to Chattanooga. Perhaps I could defeat you and force you to recross the creek. While you were doing so I would knock you to pieces. If you succeeded in crossing, you would find my troops in your rear between you and Chattanooga."

Jakey, neither understood nor even heard a word his opponent said, but he looked as seriously studious over the problem as if he were the general commanding.

"Are you whipped, general?" asked Maynard.

"Waal, mebbe ef I air whipped I don't know nothin 'bout it, 'n I'll jest go on fightin till I make you uns think thet you uns air whipped."

"Like Grant at Pittsburg Landing."

The reference was lost on Jakey, but it led him to think that he had made a point. He looked very wise and said nothing. He was thinking on a line which he feared might be of some practical importance to his individual self. He was not certain but that it would be necessary for him to make the connecting link in person between his friend and his friend's wife. So he turned the conversation on lines of retreat.

"Now, supposin," he said, "just supposin I war busted right hyar, how'd I git away?"

"That would depend on the condition of things. If I were the general opposing you, you'd never get away safely. I'd never stop till I had driven you into the Tennessee river."

"How could I get thar from hyar?"

"This part of your army where we are now could only fall back on Rossville. There the flanks would be better protected for a stand. You could go from Rossville to Chattanooga by this road" (pointing to it on the map). "If you should be successful in keeping your enemy far enough from you and long enough, you might cross the river there and save your army. You might perhaps stay there if not too reduced in numbers and if you could keep your line of supply open."

"This air th' bridge I'd cross th' creek on, I reckon," pointing to Reed's bridge on the map.

"That's the nearest from where we are."

"Waal, general," said Jakey in a tone to indicate that the discussion of the campaign was ended, "ef you uns bust me, I'll retreat thet a-way."

Nothing more was said about the imaginary campaign by either. Maynard's eye was fixed on his water map, and he was lost in study. Jakey let him alone till he saw that he was drifting back to his trouble. Then he endeavored to lead him into war again. At last, seizing a favorable opportunity, the boy suggested the propriety of sending some message to his wife.

"Time enough for that after the fight," was all Maynard would say. Jakey was discouraged. He knew that if his friend lived after the fight it would not be his own fault.

* * * * * * *

Jakey considered himself bound in honor to report to Mrs. Maynard her husband's condition, not only on account of his promise made her on the evening of his departure for the front, but because he had a vague unformulated notion that there are certain exigencies where only women can "do somep'n," and he knew that "the general" required his wife's attention. Mounting Tom, he set off toward Rossville, remembering by the water map that the right hand road led there.

It was about 11 o'clock at night when he reached Rossville. He determined to rest there a few hours, and making for a cavalry camp got on the "soft side" of a sergeant and turned in with his natural associates, the soldiers. Jakey asked the guard to waken him at 2 o'clock, at which time, after a bite furnished by his friend, the sergeant, and a feed for Tom, he set off toward Chattanooga. At daylight he crossed the Tennessee river and was soon on his way across the neck of Moccasin point toward his destination.

As Jakey approached the plantation it occurred to him for the first time that the information he bore was not pleasant for him to give to any one, especially a woman, and that woman "the general's" wife.

"Reckon she uns'll be skeered when she sees me," he muttered to himself. "I don't like this business nohow. Wonder I didn't think o' this befo'. Wish they wor some un ter tell her. Mebbe I'll see Souri first. Ef I do, I'll let her tell."

But Jakey was not so lucky. He reached the plantation just before breakfast time, and as Laura Maynard cast a glance from her chamber window she saw him ride up to the veranda. She remembered well the promise she had extracted from Jakey and knew in a moment that he was the bearer of some bad news. Putting her hand on her heart to stop its thumping, she ran down stairs and out on to the veranda. The boy dismounted and came up the steps.

"Oh, Jakey, what is it?"

Now, Jakey had his own methods of carrying his points, and whether or no they were original or ingenious he carried them. Sometimes his parrying was very clumsy. It was so now. He must gain time at all hazards.

"What air what?"

"There's something happened to the colonel. I know it. Tell me the worst."

"Waal, now, Mrs. Maynard, 'the general,' he hain't dead nohow."

"Thank heaven he lives! Is he ill or wounded? Is the wound mortal? Or is his illness dangerous? Will he recover? Oh, tell me, tell me!"

"Which un o' them air questions shell I answer fust?"

Souri came out on to the veranda, and seeing Jakey took him into her arms.

"What are you doing here, Jakey?" she asked.

"Reckon I air a-standin on ter th' gallery jest now."

"Mark is ill, wounded, heaven knows what!" exclaimed Laura. "He won't tell me." She clasped her hands and trembled.

"Jakey, don't give Mrs. Maynard pain by keeping her in suspense. Tell her."

But Souri dreaded to have her friend hear bad news as well as Jakey dreaded to give it.

"Waal," said Jakey, cornered, "th' general, he air d——d obstinate."

"Obstinate?"

"Yas."

"What do you mean, Jakey?" asked Souri encouragingly.

"Waal, th' general he reckons ther's goin ter be a big fight, 'n he's goin fo' ter git hisself killed."

"Heavens!" exclaimed Laura. "What does it all mean?"

"Means Miss Baggs."

"Miss Baggs!" cried the wife, bristling. "So it's something about her."

"It's all 'bout her."

"Tell me what you mean this instant," said Laura, with flashing eyes.

By this time Jakey had got to a point where he could begin to tell his story. He did so after the following fashion:

"Miss Baggs she wor ketched takin th' telegraphs off'n th' wires 'n turned over ter th' general. The general he wanted ter turn her over ter headquarters, but they was too smart for him. They told him ter try her 'n kill her."

"The cruel monsters!" cried Laura.

"Maybe Jakey's got it wrong. They'd not be likely to express it that way," said Souri.

"Reckon thet's 'bout it with a spy anyhow. Th' general he tried her, but when it come ter killin her he wasn't thar."

"The noble man! It is just like him," from Laura.

"Then he found out thet she was a sister of a old friend o' his'n."

"Who was that?" from Laura.

"Mr. Fitz Hugh."

"Caroline Fitz Hugh?"

"Reckon."

"Who is she?" asked Souri of Laura.

"I—I never saw her. I know who she is, though."

"Then th' general he dressed hisself like a private sojer, 'n he 'n Corporal Ratigan"—

"Corporal Ratigan!" exclaimed Souri.

"Yas, he 'n Corporal Ratigan they run her over th' lines."

"Well," from Laura, breathlessly.

"Th' general he confessed, 'n they tried him, 'n"— Jakey hesitated.

"Sentenced him ter be— Oh, Souri, help me!"

And Laura tottered against her friend.

"Ter be cashiered."

"Do tell me what it is," gasped Laura, looking imploringly at Souri.

"I don't know. What is it, Jakey?"

"Bein dropped out'n th' service."

"And is that all?" cried Laura hysterically. "Only dropped out of the service, and for doing a noble act! Poor Mark! I know that he will consider this a terrible disgrace, but to me it is a blessing. Now I can show him how I love him," and dropping her head on Souri's shoulder she burst into a torrent of tears.

My Wife Is Nervous

Says many a man and too often he is inclined to blame the poor, tired woman who cannot eat or sleep, whose whole life is filled with misery because her blood has become impoverished and her nervous system exhausted. She needs a building up medicine like Hood's Sarsaparilla. A few bottles will enrich and vitalize her blood, tone and strengthen her digestive organs, give her a good appetite, enable her to sleep soundly, banish her nervousness and bring back her smiles. Mr. J. W. Roberson, of Greenfield, Tenn., says: "My wife began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla about three months ago and she is now taking her third bottle. She has been in poor health for fifteen years. Hood's Sarsaparilla is doing her more good than any other medicine she has ever taken. Her appetite is better, she looks better and there has been improvement in every way."

THE St. Paul Globe announces a silver convention to meet in the near future in St. Paul. The Globe imagines that it has now solved the financial problem of the country.

EVER since he took the reins of office as receiver of the land office, Capt. T. A. Dunlava has been indefatigable in his efforts to get the land in the Red Lake reservation, that is so soon to be ready for settlement, attached to the Crookston district and by so doing he has been able to accomplish much in that direction. But very few, however, know that he has been working like a beaver in their interests.

THERE has been a great deal said about the junketing proclivities of the present legislature but no one can deny that it has been a strictly business body, even the very "junkets" complained of being made in the interest of the public institutions of the state. The state of Minnesota never had a brighter lot of men together in the legislature assembled, nor better workers, and this is universally conceded by everybody.

IN Coin's Fnancial School we find many of the old stock arguments in use by the old Greenback party—dressed up in a trifle different guise. The book is got up in so readable a manner as to make many of the what? as more plausible if one does not stop to reflect upon it. If one is able to thoroughly understand it the book is very interesting, but a very dangerous one in the hands of those who believe everything they read without trying to get at the truth.

WE notice that some of our exchanges are booming Hon. C. K. Davis for president. Well, that's all right and proper, but while that is true it is also too true that he is not located right, geographically, to be made president at this time. However, should Minnesota give him right loyal support by giving him her delegation and getting as many states in line for him as she could it would put him right in line for an important cabinet position and might develope something in time. With such material as that to offer, Minnesota should take no back seat in this matter. It is a case in which too much modesty is uncalled for.

IN compliance with numerous requests, Hon. Frank M. Eddy has taken steps looking to the early cession of that portion of the lands belonging to the St. Cloud district, lying adjoining the Crookston land district from that district and adding the same to this one. This would mean the saving of hundreds of dollars of what is really a needless expense to settlers on account of being obliged to go 200 miles beyond this city, when if the territory was a portion of this district they could stop right here, transact their business and save 400 miles of travel with all the added attendant expenses. Mr. Eddy is fully convinced of the importance of this subject and will do all in his power to accomplish it as soon as it is possible.

Dining and Sleeping Cars.

A recent issue of "Public Opinion" has the following about the equipment and expenses of dining and sleeping cars on railroads: Dining cars are generally run at a loss. A steward, four cooks and five waiters are attached to each car. The food costs from $1,000 to $1,500 a month. It costs from $16,000 to $22,000 a year to run one of these cars, exclusive of the wear and tear. A sleeping car leaving New York for Chicago is supplied with 120 sheets, 120 pillow slips and 120 towels. The washing is done in different cities at a low rate. One company, for 700 cars, uses every month 2,400 dozen cakes toilet soap, 1200 dozen boxes matches, 35 dozen hair brushes, 50 dozen whisks, 60 dozen combs and a vast number of sponges and dusters." These conveniences are now so common on first-class roads as to excite no comment except the "kick" of some passenger who fancies he has not had everything. There used to be a little objection to the uniform price of meals, but that is not heard since the "cafe plan" was adopted. The publisher of a prominent St. Paul daily said lately:—"I like the cafe plan on the Burlington dining cars, because I can pay according to my appetite and the attractions of the bill, and don't pay for what some other fellow wants." The diners on this line have the name of "peerless" in menu and cuisine and the compartment sleepers are the "finest." See that your ticket to Chicago or St. Louis reads via the Burlington. Man's Need of a Living God.

What, he asks, was of all things most needed? and in his philosophy the needs of man are a kind of prophecy or revelation. What we need is not abstract speculation, or negative dialectic. We need something that shall appeal to men of flesh and blood, struggling with temptations and discouragements, confused and baffled by theories of heredity, swayed to the material side by their humiliating experience of their subjection to their body, and not sure as to how any larger and consoling truth can be welded to a physiological view of life. To meet this need, nothing will suffice but a faith in God and a living God. A deity, infallible, remote from all human conditions, gives little help to men hesitating whether to count themselves as beasts that perish or among the sons of God. What bridge can be found to span the immeasurable gulf which separates infinite spirit from creatures who seem a little more than physiological accidents? But to Mr. Balfour, although it is a hard thing to believe that we are made in the likeness of God, it is yet a very necessary thing, and if that need exists, can it be more effectively satisfied than by the Christian theory of the world?—From "The Foundations of Belief," by W. T. Stead, in the April Review of Reviews.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

From our Regular Correspondent.

WASHINGTON, April 17, 1895.

It has been difficult to collect money from the government ever since the Cleveland administration came into power, and it is going to be more difficult than ever. It has been the policy of the Treasury to raise all sorts of obstacles to defer payment on government vouches of all sorts. It was this policy that caused Senator Gorman to say on the floor of the Senate that if all proper demands on the government were paid there would be a deficit of not less than $100,000,000. At a cabinet meeting held after the decision of the Supreme Court, in the income tax cases, was fully digested it was decided that the calling of an extra session of Congress should be avoided if possible; and the possibility of keeping money in the Treasury by delaying payments upon appropriation made by Congress was considered. It is not certain even then that Congress will not have to be called together.

That the exemption of incomes from rents and state and municipal bonds will cut off at least one half of the amount that would have been received from the income tax is admitted by everybody who knows anything about the subject. And not a few believed that the advice of eminent lawyers, based upon the failure of the Supreme Court to declare the law either constitutional or unconstitutional, will result in the failure of thousands to pay the tax. Men who were loud in their praises of the tax are now bitterly opposed to it, because of the exemptions made by the court. They say that these exemptions will defeat the principal object of those who advocated an income tax—the compelling of alien landlords to bear share in supporting the government—and throw the principal burden of the tax upon business men, manufacturers and other large employers of labor, and their argument appears to be a good one.

The change, openly made in Washington, that two of the four justices of the Supreme Court who voted to sustain the constitutionality of the income tax did so on a legal technicality and that in the absence of that technicality the vote would have stood 6 to 2 against the constitutionality of the entire law, instead of the clauses exempted, is not calculated to add to the popularity of the law, nor to the willingness of of anybody to pay the tax.

Friends of Senator Blackburn, in Washington, say that Mr. Cleveland's action, in appointing a man named Joplin to succeed Mrs. Helm as postmaster at Elizabethtown, Kentucky, after the Senate had refused to act upon the nomination of Joplin to that office, will greatly aid Senator Blackburn in his campaign for re-election to the Senate. Mrs. Helm is the youngest sister of Mrs. Abraham Lincoln and the widow of a confederate brigadier who died in battle, and it was at the request of ex-Confederate soldiers in Kentucky that Senator Blackburn espoused Mrs. Helm's cause and succeeded in preventing action upon Joplin's nomination. Mr. Cleveland is opposed to the re-election of Senator Blackburn, on account of his views on the silver question.

Mr. Cleveland now regrets that his friends arranged to have him invited to Chicago to make a gold speech, in order to counteract the silver element, which seems to be in a fair way to get control of the democratic party in that state. The principal cause of his regret is that it has been represented to him that if he makes that gold speech it will result in an open rupture between himself and Vice President Stevenson, who is stated to be the beneficiary of the democratic silver convention which has been called to meet in that state in June. The official relations between Mr. Stevenson have been strained for a long time, but the former is not yet ready for an entire break in those relations. It is regarded as certain that the Illinois democrats will at the convention declare in favor of free silver, regardless of anything that Mr. Cleveland may say; hence his regret that anything should have been said about his making a gold speech in the state. He is just human enough not to wish to put himself in a position to get knocked down by the Illinois democrats.

Senator Dubois, of Idaho, who is now in Washington, has as all the world knows, some very positive views on the subject of the restoration of silver as a money metal. He says: In my judgment the outlook for silver is bright. A great majority of the voters want it restored, and they will not be fooled any more with meaningless resolutions in national platforms or by politicians who talk one way and vote another. Senator Dubois believes the restoration of silver will be the work of the republican party.

EASTER SERMON.

He Is Risen.

Summary of the sermon given by Rev. Herman P. Fisher, on Easter Sunday morning in the Congregational Church of this city.

What a triumphant joy does this truth give to sorrowing humanity everywhere! How many have looked with fear and trembling at death and the grave! Said our poet of nature: "When thoughts of the last bitter hour comes like a blight over thy spirit, and sad images of the stern agony and shroud and pall; and breathless darkness and the narrow house make thee to shudder and grow sick at heart; go forth under the open sky, and list to nature's teachings, where from all around earth and her waters, and the depth of air, comes a still voice—Yet a few days and thee the all-beholding sun shall see no more in all his course; nor yet the cold ground where thy pale form was laid with many tears; nor the embrace of ocean shall exist thy image."

Said England's soul-poet when he received his mother's picture:

"Oh, that those lips had language! Life has passed
With me but roughly since I saw thee last;
Those lips are thine—thine own sweet smile I see,
The same that oft in childhood solaced me."
"My mother, when I learned that thou wast dead,
Say, wast thou conscious of the tears I shed?
I heard the bell tolled on thy burial day,
I saw the hearse that bore thee slow away
And turning from my nursery window, drew
A long, long sigh, and wept a last adieu."

And yet another look described by our own poet of the people:

"Ah! to wait for death! To see one's idol with the signature of the destroyer stamped upon her brow; and know that she is doomed beyond all hope; to watch her while she fades; to see the form that once was beauty's own become a corpse in all but breathing, and to meet her eyes a hundred times a day—while the heart bleeds—with smiles and smooth dissembling, and with words cheerful as morning; and to do all this through weeks and weary months, till one half longs to see the spell dissolved and feel the worst that death can do."

Let us on Easter morning, like Mary and many another one, visit the sepulchre—not the sepulchre of Jesus only, but the great sepulchre to which we shall all be borne soon—we know not how soon, and others will stand at the door and look in. What a dark, cold, narrow place it is! How many dear ones we have borne thither, "never more to meet us here." It is natural to linger there. Not all can tell why. The heart clings to the lifeless form, and when that is gone even the mounded earth is dear.

As we stoop down, angels meet us there and say, "He is not here; be is risen; he goeth before you; there shall ye see him." Such was the first Easter morning greeting. It revealed a life beyond, and showed to love that it need not waste its warmth upon a grave.

Let us ask our hard questions now—sad questions—those that were sad before, "If a man die shall be live again?" "Because I live, ye shall live also" Does not the tomb end all? "Whatsoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die." Is there another life beyond? "I ascend to my Father, and to your father, to my God and to your God." "Where I am there ye may be also."

I. May Easter morning reveal to us the difference between a mere restoration and a resurrection; between a personal presence which—conditioned by time and space—may flee away at any moment, and a glorified abiding presence, which is with us alway. What a new significance the first Easter morning gave to the "valley of the shadow of death!" The Saviour lost nothing there, while he gained much. That "narrow house" was henceforth the place where life's limitations were left, and life's realities revealed. No more bloody sweat, no crown of thorns, for "former things are passed away."

II. Again, may Easter morning show us the superlative value of life. The glorified Saviour bore in his risen body the marks of what He had been and had suffered. Life's deeds, struggles, and attainments have a transcendent significance when projected into the realm beyond the grave.

"No act falls fruitless none can tell
How vast its power may be,
Nor what results enfolded dwell
Within it silently."
"The tissue of the life to be
We weave with colors all our own
And in the field of destiny,
We reap as we have sown."

III. Finally, may Easter give to bereaved ones a sense of the personal measures of divine things.

Mary, with reverent step bearing her burden of sorrow, approached the sepulchre. She was there to weep. She expected to do nothing else. She was the most sad and friendless of all Jesus' disciples. To her surprise even the body of her Lord had been taken away. Oh, how lonely! But was she alone? Ah no! The Master was there and He spoke the word as only one in all the world could speak it,—"Mary!" He then vanished from her sight, but it mattered not to her that He was invisible. Henceforth He might be "unseen but not unknown." She had found Him and "ran with joy to bring the disciples word."

We may not know how near to us are "those angel faces" which "we loved long since and lost a while," but we know that Christ "liveth—ever liveth," that He is with us alway, and that where He is, there His faithful ones shall be.

The Doctrine of Needs.

The substance of all of Mr. Balfour's argument lies in the prominence which be gives to human needs in the constitution of the universe, which he assumes must in some way or other at some time satisfy those needs. By the very constitution of our being, he argues, we seem practically driven to assume a real world in correspondence with our ordinary judgments and perceptions. A harmony of some kind between our inner selves and the universe, of which we form part, is assumed in every belief we entertain in phenomena, and he only asks that a similar harmony should be provisionally assumed between that universe and the other elements in our nature which are of a later and more uncertain, but not of a more ignoble, growth. It may be said that this is all assumption, but Mr. Balfour replies that the whole of modern science at its last resort is based upon assumption, and that the moment we look into the more or less deceptive appearance of things, we come at once upon a multitude of mysteries, invisible, impalpable entities or hypotheses, which every man of science postulates, but which no man of science can explain. As it is necessary for the scientist to postulate the idea of heat, space, form, matter, motion it is necessary for a scientific mind working in a region not less real, and equally mysterious, to require the assumption of the existence of a real authority operating in the affairs of the world.—From "The Foundations of Belief," by W. T. Stead, in the April Review of Reviews.

S. E. Chapin arrived from Phoenix, Arizona, last week, and is visiting old-time friends a while, ere he returns to his new love. He reports things booming in that new country and thinks the opportunities for making money there are more numerous than any place he has seen yet. They call it "irrigating" down there and have a canal 90 miles long—never see any rain—and Knute Nerland couldn't stand it and came home right away quick.

Last Friday morning when the foreman of the Truax farm went out to the granary to load up sacks for seeding he found that eight sacks were gone, and after starting the seeders he began to look up matters to see what he could find. Very soon he discovered wheel tracks and was enabled to follow them to the old LaPlante place where he found a quantity of wheat that corresponded with that he had lost. He reported the case to the proper authorities and the wheat was brought to the city by the deputy sheriff. Dolphus Lovely, who lives on the place denied all knowledge of the affair, but circumstances do not seem to corroborate him.

Joseph Simpson, who has farmed in Polk county for 17 years or more, in conversation with the JOURNAL man last week said that he sees no particular reason for farmers to get discouraged here. Said that by his methods of farming his entire wheat crop yielded 26 bushels per acre and last year was a bad wheat year being too hot and dry. He says it requires thorough cultivation and this spring there is no good reason why farmers cannot put in their crops in elegant shape as the land was never in better condition to be worked. "I just sold a hog at one of the markets that brought me $24 in cash" said he, and I consider that better than wheat at 26 bushels per acre with present prices."

One carload of poles for the telephone company arrived on Saturday last on the Fosston line, the first of the lot intended for the Crookston and Grand Forks line. It will require 900 poles, over three carloads more.

Uncle Billy Wilson was over from Grand Forks on Wednesday transacting some business at the court house. He does not look a day older then when in the early days of Polk county he was one of the most prominent figures in politics. He has not lost his grip in that line yet, for while Uncle Billy dont say much he can give lots of the younger fry cards and spades in politics and then win the game.

COUNTY BOARD.

Proceedings of the Board of County Commissioners. Special Session.

The County Dads Meet in Session and Transact Lots Of Business

BOTH WISE AND OTHERWISE.

The Board of Commissioners of Polk county met in special session March 28th, 1895, with members Opegaard, Kirsch, Lindem and Norland present.

The record of preceding meeting was read and approved.

The petition of Even P. Tuff, et al. asking for the formation of a school district, a hearing of which had been set for this meeting, was taken up and considered. A remonstrance against granting the same was also considered. On motion the prayers of the petitioners was granted, commissioners Norland, Lindem and Kirsch voting in the affirmative. Order was made accordingly and the district given the number of 220.

On motion the following resolution was adopted:

"Whereas sections 13, 14 and 15 have this day been detached from school district No. 114, and sections 22, 23 and 24 from school district No. 101, and organized into a new school district numbered 220, therefore, be it resolved that the county auditor auditor and treasurer are hereby directed to credit district No. 220 with the current school taxes for the year 1894, on the above described lands."

The consideration of the Tabor ditch, known as "Ditch No. 2," was taken up, considered at length, and determined as follows:

"In the matter of the hearing on the construction of Ditch No. 2, coming before the board, the said board proceeded to hear the report of the viewers, and remonstrances of owners of real estate assessed for the benefits to be derived from said proposed ditch and after considering said report and the evidence produced before them, it is adjudged and found that the benefits to be derived from the construction of said ditch are less than the total costs of said ditch and damages awarded, and that the benefits to be derived from said ditch do not exceed the cost thereof, and that the construction of said ditch is not warranted. And it is further adjudged and determined that proceedings in said matter be discontinued. And it is further ordered that the county attorney proceed to collect the amount of expense and costs already incurred from the petitioners on their bonds, not to exceed the penal sum of the bond."

SEA ANEMONE AND BARNACLE.

An Odd Pair of Chums to Be Seen In the Aquarium at Castle Garden.

The sea anemone is very sensitive. It closes at a hostile or thoughtless touch, not rapidly, for it can't do anything very rapidly, but as rapidly as it can, curling its tentacles inward and covering them over with its outer skin and flattening it down upon the rock. But it is not disturbed by its friends. In one of the smaller glass tanks at the city's aquarium at Castle Garden there are several little sea anemones taken from spiles and stones about the Battery. In the same tank, almost within reach of these anemones, are some common barnacles—little ones, half an inch or so in diameter. Lacking in beauty as the barnacle may be, it is provided with a most wonderful handlike member, which it throws up from its shell, with which it sweeps the water for food, the minute animalculæ upon which it feeds.

One of these barnacles is so close to one of the little anemones that when he flings his net it almost or quite touches the tips of the anemone's tentacles, which spread like the most delicate and feathery branches of the tiniest little tree. But the anemone doesn't close up. Not a bit. Here down deep in the tank its branches wave in the gently agitated water, as, delicate as they are, they might do in the gentlest zephyrs on the land, and they wave and wave as the barnacle throws its net. Perhaps the sea anemone has its own benefit in mind through all this, for it is quite probable that the agitation of the water brings to it food that it might not otherwise receive; but, however that may be, the fact remains that the little anemone that would close at the slightest touch of an enemy is quite undisturbed by anything that its friend and neighbor the barnacle might do.—New York Sun.

Flowers In Northern Russia.

An English traveler in northern Russia writes to The Gardener's Chronicle that nothing surprised him more than the universal presence of well grown flowering plants in dwelling rooms. Even in the cells of monasteries and in the studios of city photographers farther north than Archangel he found such plants as oleanders, crotons, pelargoniums and fuchsias in almost every room. The double windows, so necessary to keep out the cold, have a draft tight space between them filled with flowering plants, and it does not seem necessary to open them for air during the short hot summer. From September to June the country is buried in snow and shut in by ice. The average temperature for January is only 10 degrees. The July temperature, however, has an average of 60 degrees F., which is hardly to be wondered at when it is remembered that the sun shines 22 hours out of the 24.

COMPLICATIONS WILL ARISE.

Dissatisfaction Over a Department Order Regarding White Earth Lands.

WHITE EARTH, Minn., April 15.—The Chippewa commission has received instructions from Washington to allot no lands to persons of mixed white and Indian blood who have had scrip issued to them under former treaties, and to cancel the allotments already made to such persons. The enforcement of such an order will work great hardship in many cases, and serious complications may arise in consequence. The act of Jan. 14, 1889, under which so much money has been expended, required the assent of two-thirds of the Indians to become a law. A bare two-thirds majority was obtained and the withdrawal of scrip-holders under former treaties from participating in the benefits of the act will necessarily invalidate their signatures to the same, and their number is sufficient to make the act null and void.

SALES OF STATE LANDS.

Auditor Dunn Says There Will Be None for Some Weeks at Least.

ST. PAUL, April 15.—State Auditor Dunn has received a number of inquiries of late as to the date for the next sale of agricultural lands, which is usually held in the spring. Auditor Dunn has been unable to reply definitely as to these inquiries, as nothing can be done until the outcome of the measures now pending in the legislature relating to the state lands shall have been determined. Consequently no announcements of sale will be made until the legislature adjourns. If neither of the pine land bills goes through the usual six weeks' notice required under the present law will be given. Under the terms of H. F. 359, the Staples measure, if it should become a law, there would be no sale this year.

George Ciprico Dead.

THE TERMS OF PEACE

CONVENTION BETWEEN CHINA AND JAPAN IS SIGNED.

Chinese Commissioners Now Preparing to Leave for Home—Japan Gets Formosa and All the Places She Has Conquered—An Offensive and Defensive Alliance.

LONDON, April 16.—A dispatch to The Times from Shanghai says that Li Hung Chang's son-in-law telegraphs that a peace convention was signed at Simonoseki Monday by the plenipotentiaries of China and Japan. Following are the terms of the convention:

First—The independence of Korea.

Second—That Japan retains the places she has conquered.

That Japan shall also retain the territory east of the Liae river.

Fourth—That the Island of Formosa be ceded permanently to Japan.

Fifth—The payment of an indemity, of $100,000,000 and Sixth—An offensive and defensive alliance.

CREDIT THE REPORT.

The News, Though Unconfirmed, Thought to Be True at the Japanese Legation.

WASHINGTON, April 16.—There was no information obtainable on the subject at the Japanese legation. The official to whom the dispatch was shown was inclined to credit the report that a treaty of peace had been signed as in view of the near approach of the termination of the armistice some action was probable. Still, up to a late hour, nothing had been received at the legation to confirm the statements contained in the dispatch.

Foster Confirms the News.

WASHINGTON, April 16.—Mrs. John W. Foster, wife of the ex-secretary of state, has received a dispatch from her husband, who is confidential adviser to the Chinese peace envoy, confirming the report that articles of peace had been signed between China and Japan. The cablegram said that the peace agreement was signed Monday, and that Mr. Foster would be home on June 1.

Chinese Preparing to Leave.

SIMONOSEKI, April 16.—The conference of the peace commissioners lasted five hours. All the envoys were present except Viscount Mutsu. It is believed that this conference was the final one. It is stated that the Chinese plenipotentiaries are preparing to return home.

CALLEJA'S CHAGRIN.

Cuban Commander Exercised Over the Premature Report of Maceo's Capture.

HAVANA, Cuba, April 10.—Chagrin and anger succeeded the premature elation of Captain General Calleja over the supposed capture of Joseph Maceo. Maceo's double was captured, but not Meceo. Anticipating unusual efforts to capture him the wily Cuban general donned a disguise and went to the front in command. Colonel Guerra was the one captured while Maceo escaped to the mountains with a few of his followers. It is expected, however, that he will be captured, as many small parties are in pursuit of him.

GRANTED LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Consul Williams at Havana Will Take a Vacation.

WASHINGTON, April 16.—It is said at the state department that United States Consul Williams at Havana has been granted 60 days leave of absence, that this leave is given him every year, and its allowance now has no significance. It is not known when he will leave for the United States. While the state department attaches no significance to Consul General Williams' leave of absence, it is known that Spain made a formal request for his recall about a month ago.

M'LAUGHLIN ON TRIAL.

New York's Chief Detective Charged With Bribery and Extortion.

NEW YORK, April 16.—William W. McLaughlin, police inspector and chief of the detective bureau, was placed on trial in the court of oyer and terminer before Judge Barrett during the day. This trial is the outcome of the recent deliberations of the extraordinary grand jury, who found no less than five indictments for bribery and extortion against McLaughlin. The offenses charged are alleged to have been committed while the indicted officer was captain of the First precinct, and it is claimed that he accepted money from builders and others in return for police protection.

AGAINST THE UNITED STATES.

A Paris Paper Advises Europe to Form an Economic Defensive.

PARIS, April 16.—The Echo de Paris advises Europe to form an economic defensive against the United States.

With reference to the expression of sympathy upon the part of the senate of Florida with the Cuban rebels, The Echo de Paris protests against the manner in which the United States interprets international laws, and declares that American intervention in Asia and Europe in regard to Armenia should attract the vigilance of Europe.

Smith Approves the Selection.

WASHINGTON, April 16.—Secretary Smith has approved selection lists of railway lands as follows: New Orleans Pacific railway, 9,062 acres in Louisiana; Oregon and California railroad 52,897 acres in Oregon; Northern Pacific railroad, 14,353 acres in Minnesota and 1,060,646 acres in Washington.

McBride Will Not Resign.

COLUMBUS, O., April 16.—Mr. McBride's most intimate friends say that they have no intimation that he intends to resign as president of the American Federation of Labor. On the contrary he expects to resume his duties, which have been looked after during his illness by the vice president, as soon as his health will permit.

SEGREGATE CHICAGO.

Plan to Practically Cut Off Cook County From the Balance of Illinois.

SPRINGFIELD, Ills., April 12.—A movement was set afoot by Representative Jones of Green in the legislature which, if carried out, will practically sever Cook county (Chicago) from the state of Illinois. It was in the form of a joint resolution providing that the question of giving Cook county a separate government from the balance of the state shall be submitted to a vote of the people. The resolution recites that the rapid and unprecedented growth of Chicago renders it necessary for special laws to be enacted at every legislature. The interests of Chicago are in many instances directly opposed to those of the state at large and therefore injustice must be done one section in order to benefit the other. It is therefore resolved that there be submitted to the people for their ratification or rejection at the next general election for members of the general assembly an amendment to take the place of Sec. 10 of Art. 10 of the constitution.

AT AUCTION SALE.

Properties of the Whisky Trust to Go to the Highest Bidder.

CHICAGO, April 13.—The properties of the whisky trust will be sold to the highest bidder. Judge Showalter of the United States circuit court, in an order issued during the day, admitted that the trust no longer had a legal existence. Its board of directors were charged with having deserted its trusteeship, that it had no quorum and any election of new members of the board would not enable them to reacquiesce the property from the receiver. The court directed that the receiver sell the property and that the proceeds be distributed among those entitled thereto.

FARR ESCAPED.

The Winnipeg Man Who Tried to Burn His Family Breaks Jail.

WINNIPEG, April 16.—William Farr, the Canadian Pacific locomotive engineer who was under arrest for attempting to burn down his house for the supposed purpose of getting rid of his wife and four children, made his escape from the police station and is still at large. Farr's plan to cremate his family is the most diabolical thing known in criminal annals here. It transpires that he was engaged to a young lady and was shortly to marry her.

A CONSTITUTIONAL DEFECT.

Said South Dakotans Will Not Vote on Resubmission Next Fall.

ABERDEEN, S. D., April 15.—It is asserted here upon very reliable authority that the prohibition question will not come before the people next November, owing to a constitutional defect in the action of the recent legislature. The matter is causing great excitement among those most interested, and the Prohibitionists at the present time seem to have the matter in their own hands.

Ex-Treasurers in Luck.

MADISON, Wis., April 17.—Governor Upham has signed the bill relieving ex-State Treasurers Baetz and Kuhn from paying the judgments obtained by the state against them and ex-Treasurer McFetridge of paying the remainder of the judgment against him. The Baetz judgment was about $80,000 and Kuhn's $110,000.

A Whistler Story.

One of the best of the Rossetti stories concerns Mr. Whistler. Once Rossetti asked Whistler how he liked a sketch he had made for a picture. "It has good points," was the answer. "Go ahead with it." A few weeks later he was asked about the picture. "Doing famously," said Rossetti. "I've ordered a stunning frame for it." Some time later Mr. Whistler saw the canvas, framed, but still virgin of paintbrush or paint. "You've done nothing to it," said Mr. Whistler. "No," replied Rossetti, "but I've written a sonnet on the subject, if you would care to hear it." When the recitation was over, Mr. Whistler said, "Rosetti, take out the canvas and put the sonnet in the frame."

Sense of Taste In Insects.

The entomologists have detected and duly noted a singular development of the sense of taste in insects of the butterfly family. The larvæ of butterflies and moths all eat foods which are not adapted to the wants and tastes of the perfect insect, and which, in some instances, is positively obnoxious to the fully developed creature. Take, for an instance, the horrid "hog nosed caterpillar," which lives on the leaves of the prickly ash and also makes life burdensome to the orange grower. Its parents are Mr. and Mrs. Papilio Cresphontes of the order Lepidoptera, family Papilionidæ, and are the largest and most beautiful butterflies found in the latitude of Missouri. The full grown insect of this species will not touch the leaves of either of the trees mentioned above, but on them it deposits eggs, and when these hatch the substance of the leaves furnish the proper food for the larvæ. Are we to infer from this curious habit that the female butterfly of this species remembers her early existence, and from that argues that prickly ash and orange leaves are the proper food for her young, or are we to say that "instinct" guides her to a proper selection of food for her progeny? Is it not a fact that we attribute things to "instinct" because we are ignorant—that is to say, because we do not know where "instinct" leaves off and reason begins?—St. Louis Republic.

Mining In the Arctic Circle.

Few people are probably aware of the fact that modern industry has already got a foothold in the arctic regions, and that mines are worked on a large scale and a railroad regularly operated in such high latitudes. This is the case in Sweden, where the Lulea-Gellivare railroad, built for the purpose of carrying iron ore from the Gellivare mines to the seaport at Lules, extends 50 miles above the arctic circle and enjoys the distinction of being the first railroad to open up the frigid zone. Gellivare excursion trains will yet be running to arctic summer resorts. In the meantime explorers will keep on hunting for lecture material and returning to civilization to peddle it out on the platform.—New Orleans Picayune.

A RETIRED BUSINESS WOMAN.

A Page From Her History.

The important experiences of others are interesting. The following is an exception: "I had been troubled with heart disease 25 years, much of that time very seriously. For five years I was treated by one physician continuously. I was in business, but obliged to retire on account of my health. A physician told my friends that I could not live a month. My feet and limbs were badly swollen, and I was indeed in a serious condition when a gentleman directed my attention to Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure, and said that his sister, who had been afflicted with heart disease, had been cured by the remedy, and was again a strong, healthy woman. I purchased a bottle of the Heart Cure, and in less than an hour after taking the first dose I could feel a decided improvement in the circulation of my blood. When I had taken three doses I could move my ankles, something I had not done for months, and my limbs had been swollen so long that they seemed almost petrified. Before I had taken one bottle of the New Heart Cure the swelling had all gone down, and I was so much better that I did my own work. On my recommendation six others are taking this valuable remedy."—Mrs. Morgan, 569 W. Harrison St., Chicago, Ill.

Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure, a discovery of an eminent specialist in heart disease, is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or sent by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid. It is positively free from all opiates or dangerous drugs.

N. D. MILLERS QUIT.

North Dakota Association of Flour Makers Assigns.

WHERE THE LOSSES WILL FALL

Chiefly in Boston and on Banks in Minnesota Cities.

PRESIDENT THOMPSON TALKS

Gives a Brief History of the Deal—The Boston Creditors Hope for Control.

Special to The Minneapolis Journal.

Grand Forks, N. D., April 19.—All the flour mills controlled by the North Dakota Milling Association embracing two mills in this city, and one each in Crookston, Casselton, Fargo, Mandan, Northwood, Mayville, Park River, Milton, Fisher and Moorhead have been closed. The association assigned last night to W. F. Honey, brother of the secretary of the association, for this state, and to A. D. Stephens, of Crookston, for Minnesota.

Assignee Honey, when seen today, said he was not prepared to give a list of individual creditors and their accounts, but as definitely as he is able to state now, the figures are as follows:

There is due the Mandan roller mill and other New England parties, $180,000; New York banks, $25,000; banks and banking firms in St. Paul, Minneapolis and Duluth, $115,000; banks in the Red River Valley, $25,000; miscellaneous creditors in this state and throughout the country, $30,000. This includes all of the liabilities and makes a total of $375,000.

President Thompson, when seen today, said: "We organized as early as September, 1892, and we commenced business Jan. 1, 1893, making John M. Turner general manager. The capital stock was then close to $500,000, which included all the 18 mills and there was not a cent incumbrance. In addition a $75,000 cash fund was raised at time by the sale of preferred stock to the directors to be used in carrying on operations. At that time the association did not owe a dollar.

"Our object in forming the association was to better control prices. Up to that time the mills had been in such hot competition and were cutting prices to such an extent as to make it impossible to make any money. By the combination it was considered that the knifing could be done away with and the mills be operated at a profit.

"In 1893 we manufactured half a million barrels of flour and the statement presented the board of directors by the general manager Jan. 1st 1894 showed a gain of $46,000. This was transferred to the surplus fund. In 1894 we manufactured about the same number of barrels as the year before. At the present time it is impossible for me to ascertain where such a large amount of money has gone as appears to be dropped, but I presume it was lost in consigning of so much flour."

President Thompson had never taken any part in the management of the association's business outside of meeting with the directors, up to February 1 of this year, and is at present, he states, unable to tell just what was the cause actuating the Mandan Roller Mill company to make an attachment being, as it is, one of the largest stockholders in the association and its members copartners with Manager Turner in the Bismarck and Mandan mills.

Assignee Honey has taken steps to disolve the claims of priority for the assignment over the attachment. The assignment, it develops, was executed and delivered in the morning of yesterday. The attachment was levied at 3 o'clock in the afternoon. The assignment, however, was filed for record 20 minnets after the attachment. On this ground the attaching creditors will claim precedence.

The relations between Manager Turner and the rest of the directors are reported to be very strained. Developments of a startling nature are among the possibilities and promise to crop out at most any time, embodying, to some extent bitter personal differences.

It is learned from Mandan direct that the New England creditors are the Sonthers, of Boston, owners of the bulk of the stock of the Mandan mill, and also in the association. The $180,000 due them and the Mandan mill is for live assets turned over to the milling association at the time of its organization, such as wheat and flour, which should have been paid at once; but the association has stood off the Boston parties it is claimed, while taking care of other persons. It is claimed that during the absence of J. M. Turner, the general manager of the association, in Europe, the officers of the association have paid notes and obligations, not yet due, to themselves and their immediate friends, and pushed off the Boston creditors. This treatment did not please the latter, hence the attachment. The Boston parties hope to secure control of the association by these legal proceedings. If there is a fight, Turner, who is an endorser on over $200,000 of paper, will personally lose everything. If liquidation is amicably arranged, there will be sufficient assets to pay off everything due. The assets are placed at $650,000.

All levies made yesterday afternoon were made simultaneously, under previous arrangement, and 10 minutes after levies the assignment was made a matter of record in Grand Forks county.

ARBOR DAY.

Plant trees, my friend,
Plant trees to-day.

Sang the poet, and he undoubtedly had in mind Arbor Day which occurs to-morrow. As a rule Arbor Day comes when the average Minnesota farmer is very busy with his seeding but this year he has (or ought to have) his seeding all completed thus giving him an opportunity to put in the day setting out trees on his farm. If there is any one thing more than another that the average farmer of this country has neglected it is to set out trees about his dwelling place when he first took a prairie claim——and he has neglected that duty every year since the result being that he has the same treeless claim that he had when he took it. Had every man, when he first took his claim obeyed the poets advice to "plant trees" the result would have been that our winters on the prairies would now be less severe because the farm houses would be better protected from the winds than they are. On the principle that "It is never too late to mend" this deficiency can be, in time remedied if every farmer will do all he can tomorrow planting trees.

ABOUT MONEY.

The earliest record of a real estate deal is in the Old Testament, where it is said that Abraham bought the field of Ephron for four hundred shekels of silver. Coined money was not in use, for we read that Abraham weighed unto Ephron the price. Silver and gold in those days were in the form of ingots or bricks, and the amount needed was cut off and weighed. Since that day man has made considerable advance, and now has gold and silver coins of various names, as: Dimes, quarters, dollars, eagles, double eagles, marks, kreutzers, florins, ducats, Argentines, francs, Bolivionos, milreis, onzas, pesos, condors, doubloons, escudos, krone, piasters, sovereigns, crown, drachmas, gourdes, rupees, lire, sen, yen, incas, coronas, imperial, pesetas, thalers, centimes, reals, centavos, ore, shillings, pence, lepta, reis, skillings, centesimos, and roubles. The smallest subdivision of value has been effected by the uncivilized African who uses "cowries" (shells) as currency, seventy of which are equal to one cent of our money. There are other names for money, as the ready ofrhino, long green, the stug, spondulix, simoleons, the rock—but whatever it may be called, investing it in a journey via the Burlington Route, always brings good returns in speed, safety, comfort, and the satisfaction of knowing that you are on the "Main Traveled Road." Ask your agent for a ticket via the Burlington, or write to W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul, Minn.

Printer's Explanation.

A printer being asked to give his opinion of salvation as expounded by brother Moody, astonished his interlocutor by the reply that when a man became converted he was marked "alive" and was placed upon God's "standing galley" for future use; but when a man died without knowing God he was "pied" and thrown into the "hell box" by the "devil" and melted over.—Ex.

NOT GROVER'S IDEA

THE PRESIDENT CAN'T SHOULDER OPINIONS OF HIS CABINET.

He Is Much Vexed by the Interpretation Put on the Silver Letter of Secretary Morton—When Cleveland Has Anything to Say He Says It on His Own Account.

WASHINGTON, April 23.—The statement which Secretary J. Sterling Morton gave to the press last week of his views upon the financial question has been interpreted by the press very generally as an utterance made on behalf of the president and expressing the president's attitude. This inference was based largely upon the circumstances that Secretary Morton made public his statement so soon after his return from the White House, where he had been in conference with the president and members of the cabinet at the regular cabinet meeting. The surmise, however, has proven to be incorrect by denials made by both President Cleveland and Secretary Morton. The president's statement, which was given to the Associated Press by Private Secretary Thurber, follows:

"I am in no manner responsible for Mr. Morton's interview and knew nothing of it until I read it in the newspapers. When I have seen fit to say anything to the people on the money question, or any other subject, I have thus far found it quite easy to do so directly and on my own account."

HARRISON'S VIEWS.

He Says He Favors International Free Coinage of Silver.

INDIANAPOLIS, April 23.—In ex-President Harrison's speech at La Junta, which is said to outline his position on the silver question, General Harrison said:

"Now I say to you today what I said when I was president and what I have always believed: That a larger use of silver for money and free coinage of silver upon a basis to be agreed upon that would maintain its parity, with gold, was good for the whole world. I do not believe that we could run free coinage ourselves when the European governments were pursuing the policy they have been pursuing with silver. But, my fellow citizens, there are clear indications now in England and in Germany that they are feeling the effects of a scarcity of gold and its prostrating effects upon the industries."

UNCLE SAM NOT NOTIFIED OF KIMBERLEY'S REPLY

To the Nicaraguan Government—Matters at a Standstill, But Steps Will Soon Be Taken to Enforce the Demand, It Is Said.

WASHINGTON, April 20.—No information has been received here concerning Lord Kimberly's reply to Nicaragua's answer to the British ultimatum, but it is believed that Great Britain will shortly proceed to collect the claim or debt, as it is viewed from the British standpoint. The fact that Great Britain's exercise of force will not be exerted so as to effect the United States interest is indicated by the fact that neither the state department nor Sir Julian Pauncefote have been notified of Lord Kimberly's response. It is said such notification would be given if United States interests were to be Even Remotely Imperiled.

The British mode of action against Nicaragua is believed to be a "pacific blockade" of all Nicaraguan ports, but not interfering with the United States or other commerce. The latest information shows that Great Britain can at once bring to bear the formidable fleets for blockading purposes, on the Pacific side and the other on the Atlantic coast of Nicaragua. Two fleets, 19 ships in all, are variously disposed, but all could be rendezvoused for a demonstration of force. The extent of the fleets indicates the preparations for emergencies Great Britain always maintains.

SEEKING ALLIES.

Nicaragua Preparing to Resist Great Britain's Demand for Damages.

NEW YORK, April 23.—A special to The World from Colon, Colombia, April 22, says: Nicaragua is seeking allies, it is understood here. She is preparing in every possible way, it is said; to resist Great Britain's demands, contained in the recent ultimatum, for punitive damages for the banishing of British subjects from the Mosquito coast and for damages to the property of those and other subjects.

Against European Aggression.

NEW YORK, April 23.—A special to The World from Caracas, Venezuela, April 22, says: Steps have already been taken to bring about an alliance of all the Latin-American countries against European aggression. A number of governments, it is said, have approved the plan and a general congress may be called in July to consider the matter.

SPANISH TROOPS.

Their Condition Is Wretched Owing to Yellow Fever and Fatigue.

NEW YORK, April 24.—The Ward line steamer Niagara has arrived from Cienfuegos and Santiago, Cuba. It was learned from one of the passengers that a very lively state of things existed at the seat of war. The insurgents had a following of 10,000 men, 8,000 of whom were well armed. Many encounters have already taken place in which the government troops had been worsted. The officials made very light of these engagements, the passenger said, and claimed a victory wherever they had the slightest encounter with the insurgents. The Spanish troops lately arrived from Spain were said to be in a wretched state, having suffered greatly from yellow fever and from fatigue in pursuing small bodies of the insurgent troops over the mountains.

IN MRS HERSCHFIELD'S FAVOR.

The Suit at Helena Decided Against the Husband.

HELENA, Mon., April 22.—Judge Blake of the district court has decided the case of Dell Herschfield against Aaron Herschfield. The case grew out of the famous law suit at Fargo last year, when Aaron sued for an annullment of his marriage. The case went against him, and one of the judgments was that he should pay the plaintiff $1,900 for attorney's fees and other expenses. Aaron refused to pay this and his wife then sued him to compel satisfaction. Judge Blake decided in her favor, but at the request of Aaron's attorney, a stay of execution is granted for 10 days.

Followed by a Man-of-War.

NEW YORK, April 23.—The Pacific Mail steamer City of Para, which has arrived from Colon, reports that from midnight Wednesday until daybreak Thursday morning she was followed by a Spanish warship. The Para at that time was off Cape Maysi and in the vicinity of the place where the Allianca was fired upon by a gunboat some weeks ago. The Para was not molested.

IVES TURNED DOWN.

The Supreme Court Decision in the Contempt Case.

A SNAP SHOT SENTENCE IS N. G.

As the Accused Has a Right to Produce Witnesses and Have a Hearing.

Judge Ives was turned down in his contempt cases by the supreme court this morning, when Chief Justice Start handed down a decision covering the cases of Russell and Quigley. These men were fined and imprisoned by Judge Ives for contempt interferring, as he claimed, with a witness in the liquor prosecutions the judge was conducting against the East Grand Forks saloon keepers. Justice Start holds that the court has no right to convict the accused in cases of this kind upon facts within his own knowledge, and that the accused had a legal right to a hearing and to have witnesses examined in his defense. The case, with the syllabus, is as follows:

State of Minnesota, ex rel., M. A. Russell, relator, vs. District Court, Fourteenth Judicial district, Polk county, respondent. State of of Minnesota, ex rel., Hugh Quigley, relator, vs. Frank Ives, as Judge of District Court of Polk county, respondent.

Syllabus: Gen. St. 1894, S. S. 6157, 6160, 6165, 6166,, (Gen St. 1876, C. 87, S. 32, 3, 4, 11, 18) constrained and held:

First—That a party proceeded against for a constructive contempt of court, that is, one not committed in the immediate presence of the court, is entitled as a matter of legal right to a hearing upon the charge, and to have the witnesses examined in his defense. Second—That in such proceedings, the court cannot convict the accused upon fact of his own knowledge. His guilt must be established on the hearing, by competent evidence, and the affidavit upon which the warrant for his arrest was issued, is not such evidence. Three—Held that the conviction of the relators is not supported by any competent evidence. Judgments reversed.

A BIG INSTITUTION.

A few years ago, a mason, O. D. Rood, finding business in his line somewhat dull conceived the idea of starting a laundry to help matters out during the long winter months, so he bought a washtub and waded in. Very soon his business increased to such an extent that he was obliged to buy another tub or two, finally he enlarged his building and plant, putting in a steam outfit. The building burned up one night and Mr. Rood, whose health was giving out sold the concern to F. E. Hertz, who soon became so wealthy that he was enabled to sell out and travel in foreign countries. F. M. Brown became the proprietor and continued to run the laundry until a few weeks since, when Losey & Buckingham bought him out, also the laundry that Hertz had started last spring, consolidating both in the building occupied by Mr. Hertz on Second street. The business of the Crookston Steam Laundry has grown to that extent that it requires something like $75 per week to pay help alone and they draw trade from all over Northern Minnesota and Dakota as far west as Minot. Last week the receipts for washing were $210.00. Aside from the money paid out for help, this institution is valuable to our city as an advertiser as it causes our city to be talked about and known all over a large scope of country. The business is steadily growing and the boys are constantly adding to their facilities to keep up with their trade.

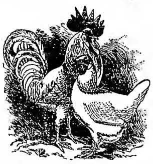
DEFECTIVE PAGE

THE MINORCAS.

Few Breeds More Profitable or Attractive In the Yard.

The Minorcas, black and white, belong to the Spanish class and are among the best layers we have, besides having good sized bodies, says a writer in Farm News. The original color was a greenish black shining in the sun, with iridescent reflections. Like all other black breeds of fowls, an occasional one would come pure white, and from these a white variety has been perfected that is not quite as large as the blacks, and they have been so closely inbred to perpetuate the variety that they are smaller and lack something of the hardiness of their progenitors.

It is an error to think that Minorcas are not winter layers, for if they are warmly housed and properly fed they will produce as many eggs in winter as any other breed we ever kept. There is probably no breed that will bear confinement as well as the Minorcas do. Give them plenty of litter to scratch in, and they will take as much exercise as they need, and a flock of them can be kept profitably in a very small lot. In shape the Minorcas are the ideal of birds, not giving place to even the aristocratic Black Spanish. They have larger combs than any other variety of domestic fowls, and their wattles are long and bright red, while their ear lobes are large and pure white, showing against their black plumage to great advantage. In the male the comb should be thin, but not thin enough to fall over to one side, and should not have more than six spikes to it, five being preferred to more. The comb of the hens should drop to one side, falling over and almost concealing one eye. The beak is strong and sharp and the breast full and round. The shanks are rather long and the thighs large and meaty. The tail of the hen is long and well spread, while that of the male is ornamented with sweeping sickle feathers, which describe a perfect semicircle.



A PAIR OF MINORCAS.

There is no more beautiful sight among fowls than a well bred flock of Minorcas, and there are but few breeds that are more profitable than they. They have been introduced but a few years, yet they have a firm hold on the affections of breeders in every part of the country and bid fair to take the place of the Spanish as layers of large eggs and many of them.

TURNING INCUBATOR EGGS.

If Not Turned, Very Few Will Produce Chicks.

I have been a close observer of the process of incubation for more than ten years, says a writer in a poultry exchange, and during that time have tried many experiments along various lines, says a writer in an exchange. For eight years I have used incubators more or less, and for four years almost exclusively, and I have convinced myself that eggs must be turned during incubation to produce the best results. I am satisfied that the hen turns the eggs at times when a mere change of her position was not the reason for it, and I know that if eggs are not turned in an incubator a large part of them will not hatch.

If a fresh egg is broken, on the yolk will be noticed a whitish spot. Many think this denotes the fertility of the egg, but this is a mistake, because it is found in eggs laid by hens with whom males have not been kept.

This white spot is a weight to hold the yolk always the same side up no matter what the position of the egg. If eggs are not turned in an incubator, the yolk soon settles to one side, and the embryo chick dies. Why this is so I do not pretend to say, but I know it is the case from repeated observations. Nearly every incubator maker advises that eggs be turned twice a day, but I never turn the eggs in my incubator before the third day nor after the eighteenth, and but once a day at any time. I think once in two days is quite as well, but I always turn them every day because it is more convenient to remember than a longer interval would be. I think the philosophy of incubation is not very well understood even by many makers. The artificial incubation of eggs is of great economic importance, and it is very easy to practice successfully if one knows how.

A Poultry Palace.

Mrs. Robert Garrett of Baltimore has just completed at her country seat one of the handsomest and most convenient poultry and pigeon buildings in this country. The building is 250 feet in length and has three turret towers, one at each end and one in the center, and its total cost was over $8,000. The center tower is fitted up as a reception room and library, and the second story is to be used as a bedroom by the poultry and pigeon keeper. The second stories of the end towers are to be used for pigeons, of which there will be eight or ten varieties kept. The balance of the building will be devoted to poultry.

As Usual, the Hen Leads.

In a recent bulletin issued by the department of agriculture the following manurial values of manure from the different farm animals and from hens is given: Sheep, $3.30 per ton; calves, $2.18; pigs, $3.29; cows, $2.02; horses, $2.21; hens, $7.07, showing that the hen manure is worth more than twice as much as the manure from any of the others.

CHICKEN TALK.

Importance of Exercise and Green Food For Breeding Stock.

The early chicks are the most profitable ones, says a writer in The Fanciers' Review, for they develop into the forward pullets that commence laying in fall and continue all winter. It is within bounds to say an early hatched chick is worth double what the late one is. But in order to have the chickens strong and vigorous it is important first to pay attention to the present stock. Only physically perfect birds should be selected to fill the important office of breeders. There is no place here for small, weak stock that has been enfeebled by croup or other disease. Pay particular consideration to the male bird. He is to furnish a part of every chick; hence the wide reaching influence of the head of a flock of hens. One can afford to pay a good price for a fine cockerel to sire chickens. A poor bird would be a dear bargain even if procured as a gift.

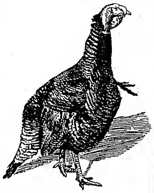
It is highly important that the breeding stock have an abundance of exercise. Unfertile eggs are largely caused through lack of exercise, and I think no one cause is more to be blamed as the source of fat, nonlaying hens in winter than is this same insufficient exercise. Next to exercise comes lack of green food and meat as the reason for infertile eggs. Clover, cabbage or roots are as important in the winter "bill of fare" of hens as is grain. Animal food is likewise necessary, and fresh raw beef is unequaled as a medium in which to supply it. Scraps and boiled meat may be good in their way, but raw beef gives the hens all the nutritious juices of meat without any loss. Usually the bird that is busy scratching is happy, contented and a good egg producer. Consequently the aim of the poultry keeper must always be to keep the fowls thus engaged. Scattering about a handful of small grain in litter is an incentive to scratching.

Will Make Hens Lay.

Poultry raisers are now using ground or cut bone in large quantities as a food for hens and with most excellent results, says The Breeder's Gazette. Green bone is not only soluble, but is food. It contains lime for the shell of the egg, nitrogen for the white, a proportion of oil and fat, and also serves as a grit. There is nothing which can approach it as food for poultry so far as a combination of excellent materials for egg formation is concerned. Bear in mind, though we also recommend ground bone, there is quite a difference between cut bone and ground bone. The one is ground while the other is cut with knives. The green bone contains also adhering meat and combines flesh and bone, forming elements which make the complete chick. Ground bone becomes hard and brittle, having lost the natural solvents by evaporation, but green bone is readily dissolved when eaten and is also the most economical of all foods. A pound of cut bone will be an excellent allowance for 16 hens, or an ounce for each hen per day.

Mammoth Bronze Turkeys.

It is quite a science to properly mate Mammoth Bronze turkeys to produce both size and brilliancy of plumage. It often occurs that the largest and heaviest bird will not compare in color and markings with a much smaller one. Then it becomes a knotty question to decide which to take. Size and correct color must be had, and if both are not to be found in the same bird it is usually thought best to have the hens very large and of proper symmetry, and mate them to a tom of great brilliancy of plumage, but if among all the poults one possessing good size and brilliant color is found by all means keep it as a breeding bird and send the undersized and dull hued stock to market.



PRIZE WINNING BRONZE TURKEY OF FISHER'S ISLAND FARM, WEIGHT 40 POUNDS.

Salt For Poultry.

It is a common error that salt is fatal to poultry, says The American Farmer. This arose from the ill effects of allowing poultry to get at salt when they had not had it as a part of their rations, and once they got access to it they ate enough to kill them. All soft food given to poultry should be salted about as much as the same amount would be for human use, and if this is done they will never eat salt to excess if they are allowed to run where they can get at it. Salt is one of the necessary elements of the blood, and if it is not furnished in some shape the health of the fowls will be impaired and their productiveness lowered.

Fowls and Their Digestion.

Fowls swallow their food, broken or not, and it enters the crop or first stomach and remains in it until it has become softened more or less, when, a small quantity at a time, just as grain runs into a grist mill, it is forced into the gizzard among the grit. The gizzard is a strong, muscular stomach, and it is at work night and day when there is a grist to grind, similar to bellows, contracting and expanding and thus forcing the grit into the grain and triturating the whole mass, after which it is in a suitable condition to be quickly digested.

FLOUR MILLING.

The Rolling Process Has Changed the Entire Means of Operation.

In the roller process the whole principle of the manufacture of flour was changed. Instead of getting all the flour possible out of the wheat in one or two reductions on millstones, the idea was to make as little flour as possible on the first production and leave a large percentage of middlings afterward to be reduced to what is known as patent flour. Nowadays the number of reductions varies from four to eight or more. Millers are now able to grind with a length of rolls equal to 140 inches per unit of 100 barrels of flour in 24 hours and do good work.

Recently the "plansifter" has stepped into notice and is used with a very great capacity both as a scalper and as a flour bolt. The purifier is greatly improved, varying in size from eight feet in length by three in width to three feet square, with the attendant dust catcher. Many mills creditable to the ingenuity of the builders have been devised to perform a number of operations in very small space, comprising rolls and separators, and also several pairs of rolls in one frame. In the wheat cleaning room the tendency has been to use more machines than formerly and to clean the wheat better. The flour as it comes from the reels is now packed with great rapidity and exactness, and the bran in some of the larger mills is compressed into half the former space by a machine that will pack 40 tons a day.

In short, the whole improvement has been on the line of smaller machines with greater capacity, taking less room, using a shorter road from the wheat bin to the flour sack, and with a reduction in the amount of power required to make a barrel of flour. A mill builder states that in a well planned 100 barrel mill a barrel of flour per 38-100 of a horsepower is fair work, while in a 1,000 barrel mill it is at about the rate of 25 horsepower per unit of 100 barrels daily [illegible] Record.

THE MAID OF [illegible]

A Perilous Trip That [illegible] Craft Successfully [illegible]

Everybody who has vi[illegible] falls has heard of the Ma[illegible]. Her history is interesting. [illegible] was built in 1854 for navigation between the American and Canadian shores of the Niagara just below Niagara falls. [illegible] was 72 feet long, with 17 feet breadth of beam and 8 feet depth of hold, and she carried an engine of 100 horse power. After seven years' service her owner desired to sell her. He received an offer of little more than half her cost if he would deliver her at Niagara, opposite the fort, and after consulting with her captain and pilot, Joel R. Robinson, he decided to accept the offer. Robinson consented to act as pilot for the fearful voyage, Jones, the engineer, agreed to accompany him, and a machinist named McIntyre volunteered to share the risk with them.

On June 15, 1861, in the presence of a large crowd, the little vessel left the dock, which was just above the suspension bridge, ran up the eddy a short distance, cleared the smooth water and shot like an arrow into the rapid under the bridge. When a third of the way down, she was struck by a jet of water which carried away her smokestack and keeled her over. But she speedily righted, and after receiving another drenching from the waves dashed on without further accident to the quiet bosom of the river below Lewiston.—New York Advertiser.

CHAPTER XXII.

THE FIRST GUN AT CHICKAMAUGA.

Mark Maynard was passing the first night after his sentence. Jakey had left him, after their discussion of the campaign, to relapse into gloom. He blew out his candle and threw himself on his camp cot. Sleep would not come. The events of the past few days caracoled fantastically before him like an army of cavalry goblins in review. They had scarcely got by before they turned and came cantering back again. Thus they marched and countermarched till midnight, and still no sign of sleep. Maynard tossed and turned and pined for day. And what would it bring forth? Surely a battle could not be much longer delayed, and with a battle there was a chance for oblivion.

Scratching a match, he reached for his watch. It was 12 o'clock. He felt that he could no longer bear those low peaked canvas walls above him. He must get out under the broader canopy. Lighting his candle, he noticed the uniform of Private Flanagan, in which he had aided the escape of Caroline Fitz Hugh. He put it on, and, throwing back the tent flaps, stepped out into the night. The sky was covered with thin clouds, behind which the moon shone, giving a light between darkness and moonlight. He set out toward the front. Passing out of his own immediate camp, he ascended the slope of Pea Vine ridge, which stood dark against the eastern sky. Climbing to one of its highest points, where he could overlook the Pea Vine valley, he seated himself on a rock and gave himself over to meditation. Around him was the dark circle of the horizon, while above was the great dome. Beneath him, on the eastern slope of the ridge, were the Union outposts, beyond which slept a Confederate army. Back of him, in the valley of the Chickamauga, were the Union troops, the two armies making in all 100,000 souls.

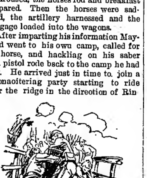
There came a distant rumbling from the south. It grew, faded, was lost and reappeared, the unmistakable rattle of a train. It came on slowly from a distance of several miles, the rolling of the trucks, the panting of the locomotive, growing louder the while till it reached a point directly east of where he was sitting and a few miles south of Ringold. There it could not only be heard, but seen by him. He watched it move on up the road, and at last it was lost in Ringold. He listened to hear if it went farther, but the sound did not recommence.

Scarcely had the train stopped when another was heard coming from the same direction. It, too, came on, was lost for a time in the tunnel, and passing north stopped where the other had stopped. Then came a third and a fourth, all moving in the same direction. In less than an hour Maynard counted five trains, all of which stopped at Ringold.

He rose from his seat. "There," he exclaimed, pointing to Ringold, "is a point from which, if I am not mistaken, there will soon come an attack on our lines. They are bringing troops in those trains to mass them on our left, where there is so little to oppose them. If the trains were going south, it would argue that the enemy were retreating. Coming north means that they are going to take the offensive. It looks to me as if this rapid moving of men at this hour meant a daylight attack right here on the left. If so, there is no time to lose. I must get back and give a warning."

He walked rapidly in the direction of Reed's bridge, and coming to the headquarters of the commanding officer of the troops he sought found an aid who was on duty all night, the general being apprehensive in his exposed position and wishing to be called at the slightest sign of an attack. To him Maynard recounted what he had seen, and the general was awakened and informed. He turned a willing ear to Maynard's caution and at once ordered that the men be aroused, the horses fed and breakfast prepared. Then the horses were saddled, the artillery harnessed and the baggage loaded into the wagons.

After imparting his information Maynard went to his own camp, called for his horse, and buckling on his saber and pistol rode back to the camp he had left. He arrived just in time to join a reconnoitering party starting to ride over the ridge in the direction of Ringold. Being in a private's uniform, he was not recognized by the men—his appearance was much changed by the loss of his beard—and fell in with the last files as though he belonged to the troop.



Tearing up the flooring.

The squadron trotted up the road leading through a gap in the ridge and stood on a summit overlooking the Pea Vine valley. By the light of day Maynard looked down upon the landscape he had seen a few hours before; but, ah, how changed! Ten thousand men in gray were coming across the valley.

It is a solemn sight at any time to see an army moving to strike a foe. There was something in the silent movement—too far for him to hear the tramp of the men advancing over the intervening space, still wearing its summer robes of green—to remind him of a thundercloud rising in a clear sky. There were compact columns of infantry steadily marching, while on either flank cavalry trotted forward, head up, like a troop of lions over jungle. Occasionally there came a confusion of distant sounds—orders—mere murmurings preceding the storm. The advancing host seemed rather a troop of specters, moving with the wind, an army of malicious spirits coming to scatter a plague from their still silent weapons.

This fancy vanished with the first few shots from the skirmishers. They were too real, too spiteful, to attribute to any but human agencies. Back goes the thin line of blue before the scattered Confederates in advance, supported by thick columns of dusty gray. No skirmish line would care to stand against these columns coming silently, not yet in presence of a foe worthy of a volley.

Suddenly there is a rumbling, shouting, a lashing of horses in Maynard's rear. Turning, he sees a Union battery, drawn by horses, galloping up the slope from the bridge. Dashing into position, the horses are swung around, pointing the muzzles of cannon toward the advancing host. The guns are unlimbered. There is a boom, followed by a shrieking shell arching toward the heavens and dropping with a sound like an exploding rocket over one of the advancing columns.

The shot produces a change in the disposition of the closely packed Confederates as a turn of a kaleidoscope alters the combination of colors. The closed columns halt, quickly extend wings on either side, joining tips, each while deploying, resembling the continued line, from tip to tip, of some huge distant bird. Now they are in line of battle and once more move forward, while the Union battery drops shells in their extended and less vulnerable ranks. Marching over open fields, crossing gulleys, now lost in a wood, to appear upon its other edge, bisecting creek and road, a slowly drawing coil, a line of the "ribbed sea sand," a streak of dust before a rising wind, the southerners move steadily forward. Before them the Union outposts give way, retreating under cover of their guns.

What are those funereal looking wagons driving up and being stationed at different points, those men, with a strip of red flannel about their arms, scattering themselves over the field? To the young enthusiast for war in the distance, who has been impatient to see a battle, these wagons, these men marked with red, composing the ambulance corps, getting ready to take care of dead who have not yet been killed, wounded who have not yet been hit, bring the first realization of what war means. There is none of the harsh music of battle about these grim looking wagons, these men waiting for victims, to brighten the eye and send the blood coursing through the veins. They go about their work in a methodical fashion that dampens ardor as water quenches fire. They mock a soldier's ambition for glory. There is something in the calculation, the preparation, to remind him that, after all, the gold lace, the feathers, the martial music, are but to cause him, like the pampered sacrifice, to forget what he is for—to be shot.

But Mark Maynard was a veteran and had seen all this before. He gave the ambulance corps a single glance, and then, looking toward a group of Union officers partly concealed from him by the smoke of the battery, saw one of them, with the stars of a brigadier general on his shoulder, peer northward through a fieldglass. Turning his eyes in the same direction, he could see a light cloud rising west of Ringold. He watched it and observed that one end of it was trending toward a ford, north of Reed's ridge. The officer soon shut up his glass, and in another moment aids were galloping away to give orders to retreat. A column of Confederates, extending for miles, were marching to the ford to turn the Union left, and no time was to be lost in getting the little force back to the bridge.

There is a quick limbering of guns, and skirmishers, cavalry, gunners, all hurry back over the ridge. At the bridge they find two regiments ready for any duty to which they may be assigned. They are directed to hold the ford to which the column of dust is moving. Protected in that direction, the force at the bridge awaits more confidently the coming of the advancing Confederates.

They have not long to wait. The skirmishers, a thin line of gray, are soon seen scurrying over the ridge like light scattered clouds before a "white squall." The main line of gray is still tramping over the Pea Vine valley, keeping the slow pace of their heavy guns. The Union men do not wait for the stronger force. They turn upon these skirmishers and drive them back through the gap to their more slowly moving comrades.

Mark Maynard, following with the rest, soon again found himself on the ridge. There, in the valley below, was the line of battle he had seen, but nearer, a crescent shaped line extending from the bank of the creek above the ford across the northern end of the ridge into the Pea Vine valley. Battleflags appeared above the line at regular intervals. Each one of 15 flags Maynard counted, indicating a regiment. He knew that the little Union force east of the Chickamauga could not stand against what appeared to be at least a division of infantry, with a very strong force of cavalry. Nor was he wrong. The scythe swung round as if moved by the arms of a Titan, mowing with its sharp edge the opposing Unionists. They were sent flying back to the bridge and hurriedly put themselves into a position to defend it.

They are ready for the storm when it breaks, meeting it with artillery and charges of cavalry. The Confederates are driven, but by this time their artillery has been got forward and posted at a point north of the bridge, where it can sweep the valley of the creek, the bridge and those whose purpose it is to defend it.

Now there is imminent danger. Will the little force on the east bank get over, or will it be cut off and captured by these overwhelming Confederates? It can only be saved by one portion charging the enemy while the others are moving by twos (the bridge will stand no more) across the structure.

Among those who charged and recharged to keep off the gray coats swarming upon them on that eventful morning, always in the advance, in the spitting line of foam that precedes the billow rolling upon the sand, Mark Maynard was ever present. As each wave rolled from the margin of the Chickamauga broke upon the southerners and receded a number of the Union troops had passed the bridge.

Maynard waited till every man was over. Then, stepping on the bridge, he joined a party who were tearing up the flooring to prevent the enemy from following. At last these left for the shore, and he remained alone. As board after board came up the Confederates pushed nearer, but still he worked on. Bullets sang to each other as they passed from east to west and from west to east, while the air was thick with interminable explosions. At last all was done that could be done. Whether his action had so excited the admiration of his enemies that they had no heart to shoot him or whether an overruling power would not let him die, he at last turned unhurt and joined his comrades.

He had been exposed as never before, as he might never be again, but he had not met death.

CHAPTER XXIII.

THE NINETEENTH OF SEPTEMBER.

Seldom has an army been in a more critical position than the Army of the Cumberland at this juncture. The Confederates overlapped the Union front on the north by half a dozen miles, and between Confederates and the Chattanooga road leading from what was both the Union left and rear into Chattanooga there were only small bodies of cavalry. Bragg had but to overwhelm these, cross the Chickamauga and march a few miles westward to seize this road and throw himself between his enemy and that enemy's base—Chattanooga. It was his intention to cross Reed's bridge by 8 o'clock in the morning with one column, and Alexander's bridge, a few miles above, at the same hour, the two columns to join and seize the coveted road, attack Crittenden's left, while a third Confederate column, crossing at Dalton's ford, would attack him in front. Crittenden once crushed under these combined forces, as it was expected he would be by noon, the whole Confederate army was to overwhelm Thomas, still ten miles distant, leaving McCook, 20 miles away, to be finished later on.

There was nothing on the left to prevent the execution of this attractive plan but the two bodies of cavalry at Reed's and Alexander's bridges. Eight o'clock came, and they were not overwhelmed. The sun stood high over the valley of the Chickamauga, and still the Confederates had not crossed at either of these two points. The defenders of the bridges were a swarm of hornets flying in their enemies' faces, with many an effective sting. At noon they were still stinging. It was not till 3 o'clock in the afternoon that the defenders of Alexander's bridge were forced to give way, and those at Reed's bridge only retired on learning that the other had been captured by the enemy. So the morning and the afternoon passed, and when evening fell but 8,000 Confederates had been thrown across. What was to have been executed on Friday, the 18th of September, must be deferred till the next day. Will it then be too late?

The moon is lighting up the field, the woods, the summits of the two ridges inclosing the valley of the Chickamauga and 100,000 soldiers. The air is cold and crisp, and myriads of campfires are scattered over the valley as a reflection of the starry heavens upon the bosom of a lake. All night the moon gleams upon the steel of the two sleepless armies—the Confederates pushing across the Chickamauga, the Unionists marching to cover their unprotected left. Many a soldier casts his eye up into the serene heavens and remarks the queen of night looking down upon him, so pale, so cold, so dead, as if in mockery of his own animate being and prophetic of what may come for him on the morrow.

From the southward comes the tramp of dust covered men in blue. At their head rides one who before the sun twice sets is to take first rank among the heroes of Chickamauga. Thomas is leading his men from a distant point far beyond Crittenden to the exposed left and rear, to the Chattanooga road—the road commanding the line of communication of the Army of the Cumberland. It must be a forced march, for the time is short and the distance is great.

From the eastward the Confederates are pushing across the Chickamauga. Every available passage is occupied, but there is little left of the bridges, and it is slow and hazardous work at the fords. Large bodies of men are like streams. They now easily across open countries, but become choked in narrow ways. Yet the work goes on. It is a long night—long for these men wading through water or standing in the chilly hours past midnight in wet clothing. It is an eventful night, for if they get across in sufficient force, and the way is still unblocked as yesterday, the fate of the Union army is sealed.

At midnight Maynard lay under a tree trying to catch some sleep. The exertion of the day would have brought it, for he was exhausted, but his position as to the army with which he had no place was burning him like a hot iron. A few days before, and he would have been leading his brigade through these stirring scenes. Now he was not even a private soldier. He was an outcast, a wretch too detestable for the respect even of menial cooks and strikers, of teamsters, of the grasping horde of army followers, whose object was to cheat the soldier and rob the dead.

The moon, finding a convenient opening in the boughs above him, looked at him in a way that in a measure quieted him. What an absence of turmoil on her surface! No guns roar in her valleys; no armies contend for the possession of her ringed ridges. The thought for a moment chased away his desire for oblivion. He shuddered at her nothingness. The scenes through which he was passing seemed far preferable. He was in the midst of man's coveted action. While that lasted he could not for long be plunged in despair. Thank heaven, he was permitted to seek solace in such turmoil, such roaring of guns and yelling of men as had come and were coming.

Toward morning his thoughts became less intense, less clear. The sounds coming from a troop of horses picketed near became more and more confused. The snores of men resting after a day of hard fighting lost their vigor. The branches above him twined indistinctly. He slept.

He was awakened by the sound of a gun. It was broad day. He started up and listened. Then came another dull boom, then another, and in a few minutes there was the rapid firing of a battle on the left. Surely that is not the little body of cavalry in whose ranks he had fought the day before.

Mounting, he rode toward it through a partly wooded, partly open country. The fields were gray, but the woods were still green. Then there was the odor of the morning in the country and the chirping of birds hunting for their breakfast. It would not be long before that perfume must give way to the smell of gunpowder, before the chirping of the birds would be drowned by the sounds of musketry and artillery.

Meeting an aid-de-camp riding at full speed toward the south, he called out, pointing in the direction of the firing, which he could now discern was on or near the Chattanooga road:

"Who's there?"

"Old Pap, with two divisions."

Maynard uttered an exclamation of surprise and pleasure.

"How did he get there?"

"Marched all night."

"Much force in his front?"

"You bet! I'm going for re-enforcements," and in a moment he was out of sight.

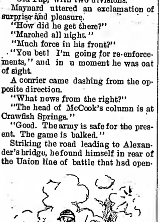
A courier came dashing from the opposite direction.

"What news from the right?"

"The head of McCook's column is at Crawfish Springs."

"Good. The army is safe for the present. The game is balked."

Striking the road leading to Alexander's bridge, he found himself in rear of the Union line of battle that had opened on the left. A force hurried by to the support of comrades at the front. The ground he was on had just been fought over and dead and wounded scattered everywhere. Entering a wood, he pushed forward through it. A young soldier, a boy of 18, was sitting on the ground, supported by a tree, gasping for breath. A red stream running down his bosom showed that he had been shot through the lungs. "You are thinking of home, my boy," muttered Maynard and pushed on. An officer lay in his path and begged him for what the wounded crave so eagerly—water. Maynard rode about hunting for a stream or a spring. At last he found what he sought, and filling a canteen rode back to where the man lay. He was dead. In his hand he held a picture of wife and two little children. Within hearing of the booming in front and shells cutting the trees above him he had passed from the harshest through the gentlest of human feelings to the eternal peace.



"Leave these ranks!"

Riding on, Maynard met an officer he had known intimately. Without thought of his altered condition the degraded colonel waved his hand in salute and cried out, "How goes the battle, major?" The officer passed by with a look which Maynard never forgot. It sent the hot blood mounting to his cheeks. He could have cloven the man's skull with his saber. But there was no need of that. Was there not an enemy at the front? Yes, and there was death. He dashed on and arrived at one of the hottest points on the left just as a line of cavalry was moving to a charge.

Joining them, he rode down into a storm so wild, so fierce, so full of destruction that surely he thought the coveted death must come. But the gaps in the ranks were to his right, to his left, anywhere, everywhere, except where he rode. And when the troopers with whom he fought came out of the fight Mark Maynard was still among the living.

So opened the battle of Saturday, Sept. 19. Throughout that day Maynard rode wherever he saw that grim specter hovered. At times he was with the cavalry, at times he would dismount, and leaving his horse in the rear go forward with a musket. On one occasion, catching the enthusiasm of battle, he was forgetting his misfortune when the officer of the regiment with which he fought recognized him. The two had been at enmity.

"Leave these ranks!"

Maynard turned, saw that he was addressed and who addressed him. Throwing down his gun, the hot tears bursting from his eyes, he turned away. Again he was tramping through a cornfield on the flank of a regiment when he saw a division general inspecting the men as they passed forward to an attack. He recognized the general who had sent the spy to him. Their eyes met. Maynard had by this time come to see through the device by which the other had led him into his present position and regarded the officer steadily. The man turned his horse's head and galloped away. There was one man in the army who did not care to look him in the eye.

The day passed with a succession of blows upon an army still too "strung out" for its own good. But they were all successfully resisted. Wherever a place was weak some brigade or division was sent to strengthen it, usually leaving a place where it had been. But all points were strengthened in time. All damage repaired, at least the damage on which hung defeat. The damage to the dead and thirsting wounded scattered along the line for miles could never be repaired. It could be counted and laid down accurately in the official reports, but who can count or repair the hearts broken with every charge, every defeat!

And so the sun went down over a field on which there was no victory, no defeat, only suffering and death.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

THE GARDEN.

Choked with ill weeds my garden lay a-dying.
  Hard was the ground; no bud had heart to blow,
Yet shone your smile there, with your soft breath sighing,
  "Have patience, for some day the flowers will grow."

Some weeds you killed; you made a plot and tilled it.
  "My plot," you said, "rich harvest yet shall give,"
With sun warmed seeds of hope your dear hands filled it,
  With rain soft tears of pity bade them live.

So, weak among the weeds that had withstood you,
  One little pure white flower grew by and by.
You could not pluck my flower. Alas, how should you?
  You set the seed, but let the blossom die.

—Pall Mall Budget.

FAME WON BY ACCIDENT.

Bastien Lepage's First Successful Picture Was an Advertisement.

The great French painter, Bastien Lepage, was pursued by unmerciful disaster through his youth in his efforts to study art. His mother worked in the fields to keep that sickly boy at school. At 15 he went to Paris alone, starved for seven years, painted without success, but still painted. He had just finished a picture to send to the salon when Paris was besieged, and he rushed with his comrades to the trenches.

On the first day a shell fell into his studio and destroyed his picture, and another shell fell at his feet, wounding him. He was carried home and lay ill and idle for two years. Then he returned to Paris, and, reduced to absolute want, painted cheap fans for a living. One day a manufacturer of some patent medicine ordered a picture from him to illustrate its virtues. Lepage, who was sincere, gave his best work to the advertisement. He painted a landscape in the April sunlight. The leaves of tender green quivered in the breeze; a group of beautiful girls gathered around a fountain from which the elixir of youth sprang in a bubbling stream. Lepage believed there was real merit in it.

"Let me offer it at the salon," he asked his patron.

The manufacturer was delighted. "But first paint a rainbow arching over the fountain," he said, "with the name of my medicine upon it." Lepage refused. "Then I will not pay you a sou for the picture!" The price of this picture meant bread for months, and the painter had long needed bread. The chance of admission to the salon was small. He hesitated. Then he silenced his hunger and carried the canvas to the salon. It was admitted. Its great success insured Lepage a place in public recognition and his later work a place among the greatest of living artists.—Current Literature.

Some Railway Mapmaking.

"This won't do," said the general passenger agent in annoyed tones to the map maker. "I want Chicago moved down here half an inch, so as to come on our direct route to New York. Then take Buffalo and put it a little farther from the lake.

"You've got Detroit and New York on different latitudes, and the impression that that is correct won't help our road.

"And, man, take those two lines that compete with us and make 'em twice as crooked as that. Why, you've got one of 'em almost straight.

"Yank Boston over a little to the west and put New York a little to the west, so as to show passengers that our Buffalo division is the shortest route to Boston.

"When you've done all these things I've said, you may print 10,000 copies—but, say, how long have you been in the railroad business, anyway?"—New York Herald.

THE POWER OF HOME.

Its Relation to Society and Its Influence In the Church.

The unit of society is the home. Enrollment that assumes to be thorough is not a registration by individuals, but by families. If we were to say that the structure of society is cellular, we should have to say that it is the family that constitutes each separate cell. No man, however entire, is a cell. No woman, however complete, is a cell. There is no finished cell except in the grouping of several individuals bound by the ties of domesticity. A bachelor is a dislocated fragment. His female counterpart is in the same category. It may not be their fault. It may lie in the necessity of their case. Still, all in all, it is a condition foreign to divine intention.

It is to the family, therefore, that we shall have to look as being the prime point of concern in all that relates to the weal of our times and our kind. The strength and health of society are to be measured by the amount of affectionate emphasis that is laid on the home idea, and the wholesomeness of society is simply the sanctity of the home writ large. Homes are each of them the separate roots that carry their several contributions to the organized structure of the general life.

All of this holds whether society be considered in its religious relations, which we know as the church, or in its secular ones, known as the state. The home is the first church, and the home is the first state. There is nothing in either of the two that is not initially present in a small way inside the home circle. As regards the former there is a very important idea conserved in so arranging our church auditoriums as to combine the congregation without sacrificing the identity of its families. The pew system of worship is the deft way that our church architecture takes to teach the doctrine that each home is a little religious organism. This is one of those interesting cases where a sense of fitness, even without being distinctly conscious of it, nevertheless asserts itself and creates a very substantial expression of itself. And there is no preacher—at least there is no pastor—who does not carry distinctly in his head, and particularly in his heart, this cellular structure of his congregation and does not feel that the significance of his congregation depends not on the number of its individuals, but on the number of its families.—Rev. C. H. Parkhurst in Ladies' Home Journal.

A CRITIC SURPRISED.

Lord Randolph Churchill's Crushing Interview With a Hypercritical Dandy.

Lord Randolph Churchill took a very keen artistic delight in his wife's musical accomplishments, but he was unwilling that any one else should speak disparagingly of them. At an entertainment once, where she had consented to execute a brilliant dash on the piano, a tall youth with bangs and a monocle was observed paying a languid and rather insolent attention to the music, standing close enough to the performer to have his comments easily overheard by her. Lord Randy was close at hand, too, and presently heard the vapid youth remark:

"Deuced fine music, you know, but it lacks weal soul—it lacks weal soul."

To the critic's astonishment a muscular young man, with a big mustache, whom he had not noticed before, whispered in his ear:

"For a shilling I'd wallop the life out of you!"

He hastened to withdraw, but without discovering the identity of the author of the menace. The next day, to his delight, he received an invitation to the Churchills' home. Of course he accepted with avidity. On entering he was met by his threatening neighbor of the night before, who, he at once discerned, must be Lord Randolph. He proceeded no farther than the entrance hall, for Churchill beckoned in the direction of the drawing room, and out floated Lady Churchill.

"This fellow has come to apologize to you for his remark of last night," hissed Lord Randolph. "Now," to the stranger, "down on your knees!"

Down went the dandy, lisping out the most abject plea for forgiveness. Then he was turned over to a footman to be put ignominiously out of the door, while the host followed his retreating figure with a roar of derisive laughter.—Kate Field's Washington.

"Pat Malloy," the famous Irish melody, was written by Dion Boucicault for his play "Arrah na Pogue." For five or six years its use by bands during the processions of St. Patrick's day was almost universal.

Egyptian lamps, dating, it is believed, from 3000 B. C., have been discovered in the catacombs along the Nile.

My Wife is Nervous

Says many a man and too often he is inclined to blame the poor, tired woman who cannot eat or sleep, whose whole life is filled with misery because her blood has become impoverished and her nervous system exhausted. She needs a building up medicine like Hood's Sarsaparilla. A few bottles will enrich and vitalize her blood, tone and strengthen her digestive organs, give her a good appetite, enable her to sleep soundly, banish her nervousness and bring back her smiles. Mr. J. W. Roberson, of Greenfield, Tenn., says: "My wife began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla about three months ago and she is now taking her third bottle. She has been in poor health for fifteen years. Hood's Sarsaparilla is doing her more good than any other medicine she has ever taken. Her appetite is better, she looks better and there has been improvement in every way."

THE 29th session of the legislature has adjourned, and it goes on record as one of the most economical, one of the hardest working bodies of the kind in the history of the state. The object has been to attend to the business of the people in a business-like manner, and this has been done. That is true Republican doctrine and this was a Republican legislature.

THE Midway News man is getting to be a good bit of a Populist himself. In his last issue he says that all that is necessary to make money is to have the government stamp a piece of paper or a coin of any kind and say it is money—and lo you have got it without regard to the intrinsic value of the piece. Just as well might the government say that a bushel of wheat is worth $2 to make it so.

WHEAT.

[The Minneapolis Tribune.]

The course of the wheat market during the past week is truly remarkable for the reason that for the last two three years we have not seen its like. The Tribune, four weeks ago, in its weekly review pointed out several factors that would shortly come into play, and is now indorsed. We have a fear, however, that the advance has been a little overdone and that our pickets have to be placed a little in rear of the ground gained during the coming week. Five or 6 cents advance in values during a single week means that the patient which has been sick for two or three years should move with caution and not forget the fever is still in its system. The week has been feverish. The revival of speculation and the advance in prices of nearly all comodities throughout the world has put an entirely new aspect on affairs and cheerfulness and hope have usurped the place of the gloom and despondency which prevailed only a few short weeks ago.

To the student of economics, it will be noticed, that there has been a gradual enhancement of values of nearly every product raised in the United States, and presents a basis for coming prosperity not before witnessed for years. Money makes money and as people gather in their profits—be it from speculation or trade—they are very apt to re-invest it in lines which hold out the greatest inducements for future gains. Those who have the gift of looking further ahead than most of their fellows are laying great stress upon the increased domestic demand for both wheat and flour. They see in this the readjustment of prices on broad economic lines in conformity with the probable reduced production of wheat and a material advance in the demand from all importing countries. Taking the week as a whole, the market, though feverish and wicked at times, presages a return to healthfulness The commercial news of the track has been uniformly bullish in tone. In fact the reports from home and abroad would go to show that the entire Northern Hemisphere is either suffering from drought or a cold and backward season. This added to the acknowledged poor condition of the winter wheat crop when it went into winter quarters, makes the friends of wheat more confident as to their position. Clearances from the seaboard during the week under review were larger and helped to straighten the trade. Today it is expected that the visible will show fully 2,500,000 bushels decrease for the week.

The week has been an eventful one for operators on the local board, and largely due to the Chicago market. It would appear that a combination of natural strength and artificial agitation on the part of the bull element in the trade forced, first the scattered short sellers in that market and later the heavy bear plungers, such as Pardridge et al to cover their lines. This undoubtedly caused a sensational market. Now while the Tribune believes in an ultimate higher range in the price of wheat it does not have an abiding faith in a market of the calibre of the last week. It was too erratic and feverish. All signs point, however, to a continuation of strength.

The cash demand throughout the whole country is truly remarkable and if continued many days longer the score will be higher. Our millers are all feeling well pleased with themselves and some of them quite independent and inclined to hold for still higher prices for their products: Our local stocks are likely to show a good sized decrease today.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

From our Regular Correspondent.

WASHINGTON, April 19, 1895.

Mr. Cleveland has removed the last vestige of doubt as to there being a split in the national Democratic party, and has virtually announced himself to be the candidate of the single gold standard wing of the party. This created no surprise in Washington. It has been foreshadowed in this paper for months past. Whether both wings will insist upon calling themselves the Democratic party, or the silver Democrats will join the Populists or the Sibley silver party is not yet plain. It will depend largely upon the effect of Mr. Cleveland's declaration upon the rank and file of the Democratic party in the south, and that effect will in turn depend somewhat upon the result of the campaigns now being waged in the states of Illinois and Kentucky. Mr. Cleveland and his followers believe that if the silver element in the Democratic party in those two states can be beaten this year, that the bulk of the Democratic party in the south will accept Mr. Cleveland's financial ideas and will support him for president again. The whole power of the administration is to be used against the silver Democrats in those two states. It is already certain that three members of the cabinet—Carlisle, Wilson and Gresham—will take the stump against silver.

The administration also proposes to fight silver in the south. A southern Democratic anti-silver convention is to be held at Memphis, Tennessee, on May 22, at which the principal address is to be delivered by Secretary Carlisle. Representative Patterson, of Tennessee, who was in Washington this week, conferring with Mr. Cleveland and the other members of the administration, says every southern state will be largely represented at that convention, which is to be, he says, made the beginning of an aggressive campaign against silver in the south.

So much for the administration view of the effect of Mr. Cleveland's declaration of open war against silver. There is a very different view of the matter taken by the silver Democrats. They say that Mr. Cleveland's move is too late; that seven-tenths of the Democratic party in the south and west is irrevocably committed to the free coinage of silver; that the silver Democrats welcome Mr. Cleveland's declaration, and will now proceed to show their power to control the party by taking steps to make sure that the next Democratic national convention shall not only declare in favor of the free coinage of silver but shall nominate a free silver Democrat for president, which they claim will bring to their support the entire Populist vote.

The republicans——well, you know the story of the boy who got his father to get down on all fours to teach a bull pup how to fight. It will be remembered that when the bull pup grabbed the old man by the nose the boy, instead of interferring, shouted: "Stick to him, dad; it'll be the making of the pup!" the average republican feels about this fight between the silver democrats and the gold democrats just as the boy of the story did about the fight between his dad and the bull pup. Whichever way it ends it will but add to the certainty of the election of a republican President, next year.

There is certainly no doubt about the Presidential preference of Representative Gillett, of Massachusetts, who was in Washington this week. When asked what he knew of the political situation, he replied: "Nothing, except that New England is solid and enthusiastic for Tom Reed for President. From the Speaker's chair to the White House would be a natural and merited promotion for this man, who in point of wit, brains and statesmanship is the peer of any living American."

Of course the public has long ago ceased to expect anything beneficial or courageous from the democratic administration, but it was hardly prepared for the admission of absolute helplessness made by Secretary Morton, when he said: "If anything is done to bring relief from beef extortione the papers will have to do it." Can you imagine any combination of circumstances that would have made Secretary Morton's predecessor at the head of the Department of Agriculture—— the late lamented Jerry Rusk, of Wis.——use language of that sort?

The administration congratulated itself too soon. England has not accepted Nicaragua's reply to its demand, and this country may yet have to choose between forcible interference and backing down.

HASTINGS AND DAKOTA LANDS.

The State Will Receive Something by Their Forfeiture.

WASHINGTON, April 20.—Land Commissioner Lamoreux was asked if the passage of an act by the Minnesota legislature declaring the lands of the Hastings and Dakota railroad company forfeited would have any bearing on the rights of settlers claiming title direct from the government. He said that the land department here had recently adjudicated all claims against the United States, and that whatever lands now because forfeited would accrue to the state. The government granted patents for about 7,000 acres to the squatters, who claimed title adverse to the Hastings and Dakota. In the opinion of Judge Lamoreaux, there will be something like 55,000 acres involved in the forfeiture, although there may be a large portion of this that will not revert to the state, owing to the fact that it is improved, and the settlers have color of title direct from the government. The railroad company also sold a considerable number of acres of this property, and whether or not the State of Minnesota will ever recover any money besides what lands there are left will be a question for the courts to decide.

It seems that a report had been circulated among th men that the Great Northern wa paying $1.50 a day for the sam work at other places, and as the were only receiving $1.25 they struc on the strength of this doubtfu rumor, for the extra 25 cents. Whe the foreman reported the facts to th superintendent, the latter telegraphe back to stop the work entirely, bu on the following morning road master Connelly came up and th men were allowed to go to work again at the old wages, which they were glad to do, having all the fun out of the strike, and wisely deciding to finish the job.

SARSAPARILLA
Admitted at the WORLD'S FAIR
CHICAGO
1893

Why Was It

that Ayer's Sarsaparilla, out of the great number of similar preparations manufactured throughout the world, was the only medicine of the kind admitted at the World's Fair, Chicago? And why was it that, in spite of the united efforts of the manufacturers of other preparations, the decision of the World's Fair Directors was not reversed?

BECAUSE

According to RULE 15—"Articles that are in any way dangerous or offensive, also patent medicines, nostrums, and empirical preparations, whose ingredients are concealed, will not be admitted to the Exposition," and, therefore—

Because Ayer's Sarsaparilla is not a patent medicine, not a nostrum, and not a secret preparation.

Because its proprietors had nothing to conceal when questioned as to the formula from which it is compounded.

Because it is all that it is claimed to be—a Compound Concentrated Extract of Sarsaparilla, and in every sense, worthy the indorsement of this most important committee, called together for passing upon the manufactured products of the entire world.

A platoon of the Salvation Army has been doing some real fighting in Chicago. The other day a band of toughs in the stock-yards district were shamelessly abusing a drunken man when a detachment of the Salvationists came on the scene. The commander gave the order to charge upon the mob, the poor wretch was taken to a place of safty. He has since sobered up, and announces that he will not only leave liquor alone hereafter, but has cast his lot with his rescuers and will do what he can to redeem those in the condition in which he was found. This is practicing army tactics to good effect.

Martin J. Lally and Capt. L. S. Hancock were mustered in to Col. Cobham Post at the regular meeting on Friday evening of last week. Among those who have recently taken a fresh start are comrades Geo. H. Holt, John McLean, J. J. Ide, C. H. Jefferson, Pat Martin, Capt. T. A. Dunlavn, N. B. Hayes and E. C. Davis. The Post has three more applications two of which have been acted upon favorably and the other no doubt will be at the next meeting and there are several more who are ready to join as soon as they can be reached. We are pleased to note these signs of renewed life in Grand Army circles.

A. Holmboe has purchased an interest in the Crookston tannery and the capacity for turning out work will be enlarged at once. This concern has proved all that its sagacious founder, Hon. B. Sampson, predicted it would be to this city and county and more too. The fact that they are obliged to enlarge to keep up with the growing trade is significant. In Mr. Holmboe the tannery has secured a competent young business man, a pusher and one who will be satisfied with nothing but the very best results that can be accomplished. This concern will prove one of the best that Crookston ever secured—far better than a woolen mill or a starch factory would have been.

The "Old Cronies" took the Great Northern train for the west on Wednesday morning.

H. A. Bruns, of Moorhead, was a passenger on Wednesday morning's Great Northern train, westward bound.

Another grist for Bella Coola leaves this week for that new El Dorado. They arranged for transportation with the Northern Pacific folks and put up $75 forfeit money. The C. P. R. folks had an agent here who was doing his level best to corral that party for his line.

On Wednesday morning our genial friend, Bob Leick, greeted us with a benign (a sort o' 7x9) smile as he proceeded to remark: "Boy at our house, 10½ pounds; will be a voter in 21 years from last night. Am feeling pretty well myself and all concerned doing nicely."

The splendid rains of Saturday seem to have settled the question of a crop for this year which was, in the minds of some, becoming quite a serious question, as they feared that the prospects were for a dry season. This fear seems now to have been dispelled in the soaking rain of Saturday, which started the grass growing, the trees to leaving out and the grain to growing in a very encouraging manner. Never before in the history of the valley at this season of the year, were the prospects for good crops so brilliant as at present.

Nels Samson came in from Roseau county to file on his claim on Monday. He was one of the first to settle in that township last year and he says that up to three weeks ago there was but two or three other claims taken in the town and now he finds that there are only 13 claims left in the town—all the rest being taken up within three weeks. He says that the county seat of Roseau will be moved from Jadis to Badger, which is nearer the center of the county, at the next election. He thinks at the rate the land is being filed on there will not be much vacant land in Roseau county next fall.

J. W. Schlevoight, one of the prominent German farmers liveing near Fisher was in the city on Monday and called on the JOURNAL man. Mr. S. says he has made a little money right along every year on his farm—but not in wheat. This year he will have barley, oats, a little wheat, a good patch of corn and perhaps a few acres in flax though he considers flax too exhaustive for a regular crop. He says: "I want to go on record as predicting that wheat will sell in this market next fall not less than 80 cents per bushel. Just put that down and see how far I miss it."

Hugh Thompson, president of the North Dakota Milling Association spent the Sabbath with his family in the city. In conversation with the JOURNAL he said that the matter of the assignment will now go into the courts and the outcome is problematical. He is in hopes, however, that the matter will be so arranged as to permit the mills to resume work at an early day.

M. R. Brown, who has had occasion to personally observe the doings in the senate during the past winter, informs the JOURNAL that the northern part of the state has had no better worker than Senator J. Q. Cronkhite, and he has been a very influential member also. He has been instrumental in securing legislation favorable to this upper country, notably the drainage bill and the local warehouse bill. As to the great hue and cry that was raised over his action on the bill for taxation of railroad lands. Mr. B. says that Mr. C. had been excused and had no idea that the bill was coming up before his return. He thinks Mr. Cronkhite is deserving of much credit for the way in which he worked for our interests up here.

Notice.

I am looking for work, washing, scrubbing, house-cleaning or a situation at house-keeping on a farm for a year or more. I am not afraid of work. I can show a good recommend in writing as to my character, and ability as a house-keeper. I am poor and have two children and any help given me in the city will be appreciated. Every body seems to be satisfied with my work, and I will be glad to find work.

[2-tf] Address, JOSIA GOTTING,
Formerly Mrs. Bulthaupt, No. 408 Main street, Crookston, Minn.

Bonds Voted.

The special school meeting on Saturday evening was well attended, in spite of the rain and the bonds were voted by an overwhelming majority. This is as it should be.

Had No Right to Vote.

LAFAYETTE, Ind., April 20.—In the superior court Judge Everett held that in the suit of Mrs. Helen Gougar, who sought to recover damages from the election board for refusing to allow her to vote at the last November election, that under the national and state constitutions, women were excluded from suffrage, and decided against Mrs. Gougar. The decision is important, because it is a test case.

Life Gone Out of Oil.

PITTSBURG, April 23.—The life and activity seems to have gone out of the oil market. Oil opened at $1.95 bid and was offered at $1.98, down to $1.96 without any sales. Only 2,000 barrels were sold on the Oil City exchange up to 10:30. The Standard again made reductions in the price for credit balances of 15 cents, to $2.10.

Durant Indicted.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 20.—The coroner's jury shortly before noon rendered a verdict declaring Durant guilty of the murder of Minnie Williams.

A NEW PRINCIPLE.

Case of Simultaneous Land Settlement Decided.

WASHINGTON, April 22.—In the case of L. J. O'Toole versus W. P. Spicer, at Watertown, Ia., for homestead entry, where both parties settled simultaneously on the land in question, Secretary Smith has decided that it must be sold to the highest bidder. This establishes a new principle, a similar one never having come up for decision.

Sons of the Revolution.

BOSTON, April 20.—The National Society of the sons of the Revolution is holding its annual convention in this city at Faneuil Hall. Delegates representing every state society in the country will be present. A feature of the meeting will be a proposition to unite the two patriotic societies, the Sons of the Revolution and the Sons of the American Revolution.

Attempted Burglary.

Comrade Kistenmacher tells us of a raid that occurred in his neighborhood one night last week, that looks like an attempt at burglary. An individual was seen prowling about the residence of Mr. Ray and that of Mr. Fontaine, also Mr. Kistenmacher, but the dogs made so much fuss that the party, whoever it was, did not succeed in his design if that design was burglary. That neighborhood will be prepared to give any prowlers a warm welcome should occasion demand, having procured each a Gatling gun and various and sundry other dangerous samples of fire arms. Comrade Kistenmacher has a loaded billiard cue and he says: "By jabbers I shoot him mit dot if he come."

EUCLID ITEMS.

The friends of B. Carrish, of Keystone, who has been so dangerously ill for some time past, will be glad to learn that he is rapidly recovering.

Mrs. C. Nelson has made extensive improvements in her house lately and has opened it to the travelling public as a boarding house. She also has good stable room in connection.

Mrs. Stone and daughter Grace, of Warren, came down Wednesday evening and returned the following morning.

Lewis Hancock rode up from Crookston on a bicycle Wednesday evening and returned Thursday morning.

Benj. A. Strawbridge came up from Crookston, Thursday morning and after selling H. C. Misner & Co. a new Remington typewriter started back for Crookston by the means with which nature has provided him.

T. H. Bjoin, of Crookston, was in our city last Thursday.

Dr. McGillan, of Warren, and H. C. Misner, A. H. Pitkin and Dr. J. S. Chapin, of this city, drove to Crookston, Thursday evening, to attend a special meeting of the Crookston Lodge A. F. & A. M.

Henry Stuhr, of Warren, drove down with Dr. McGillan, Thursday, and returned home Friday morning.

Mrs. J. S. Chapin and F. H. Gambell returned Friday, from Ada, where they attended the meeting of the district lodge I. O. G. T. They report the meeting as an excellent one, it being the largest of the kind ever held in the state. They also speak in flattering terms of the hospitable manner in which they were treated at Ada.

Capt. L. S. Hancock and Lewis Cottet drove to Crookston, Friday morning. Mr. Hancock came back Saturday morning a full fledged member of the G. A. R.

Walter Kelso was down from Hallock, Saturday. Mr. Kelso says that in spite of the prevailing hard times, Kittson county land is steadily improving in value and that the future outlook for Hallock is very encouraging.

There was an unusually large attendance of ladies at church Sunday morning. But it isn't to be wondered at when we remember that Miss Maggie Kingstone, was down from Warren, Thursday, Friday and Saturday, of last week, with a complete line of millinery.

The recent rains have caused the ground as well as the farmers' faces to assume a brighter appearance.

Miss Belle Borril is down from Warren, this week, sewing for several families in town.

Ex-Sheriff Dady, of Warren, was down on official business Monday.

Miss Lena Coon has been quite seriously ill the past few days.

Joseph M. Heard, of the C. W. Hackett Hardware Co., of St. Paul, spent Tuesday night in our city.

Ole Erickson and Ole Miller, of Northland, were here Tuesday and purchased a well boring machine of Robert Casmey.

A large and handsome Barre granite monument arrived at the depot last week and will be erected on the lots of H. C. and I. W. C. Misner, in Prairieview cemetery, as soon as the ground gets in proper condition. The stone is one of the finest yet erected in this part of the country and will add greatly to the beauty of the already pretty cemetery.

The Ladies' Aid Society will serve a missionary tea at the residence of Mrs. Robert Teal, Thursday, April 25.

Work has been resumed on the church by contractor Nick Engle and Rev. J. B. Astwood.

Lardepsia

would be a more appropriate name for that common cause of suffering—dyspepsia—because most cases of dyspepsia can be traced to food cooked with lard. Let COTTOLENE take the place of lard in your kitchen and good health will take the place of Dyspepsia.

Try it. Every tin. of the genuine COTTOLENE bears this trade mark—steer's head in cotton-plant wreath.

SELECTIONS

THE LANGUAGE OF TRADE.

Words and Phrases That Don't Describe the Things They Are Applied To.

"Your cloth is better than that," said the tailor to the customer, placing two pieces of worsted diagonal side by side.

"What's the difference?" asked the customer.

"Well," said the tailor, "the other is good part cotton."

"And mine's all wool?" asked the customer.

"Yours is mostly wool," replied the tailor, looking at the customer with evident surprise at his innocence.

The cant phrase, "all wool and a yard wide," has come to mean half cotton and 27 inches wide. Some persons believe that the difference between phrase and fact is to be attributed to the tariff on woolens and worsteds, but such discrepancies run through all branches of trade whether they are affected by the tariff or not. Every real thing has come through modern ingenuity to have an admirable counterfeit bearing the real thing's name, and so meaningless have names become in trade that the retailer sells the counterfeit under the name of the real with little or no consciousness of untruthfulness. Male customers usually fail to understand this and are outraged on discovering that the thing does not correspond to its name, but women who are born shoppers long ago accepted the situation and adopted the false nomenclature. They do not resent as dishonest the conduct of the grocer that offers "fresh eggs" at so much and "strictly fresh new laid eggs" at 50 per cent more.

Every woman knows that the shops sell for silk material that has a cleverly made surface of pure silk on a back of cotton. Women judge not by the name, but by the price, the "feel" and other indications to which men are blind. It was discovered a few years ago that many imported silks were made with only a small percentage of real silk along with clay for weight and soap for luster, while American manufacturers were turning out the real thing and finding it despised.

There is a regularly recognized set of substitutes in every department of trade, just as the druggists have substitutes that are made to serve when some unimportant ingredient in a prescription is not at hand. The word porcelain has actually lost its true significance, save perhaps in the fine arts, and cooking utensils are glibly sold as "porcelain lined" that have merely an inner surface of coarse glazed clay. A Philadelphian invented a good many years ago a sort of white glass for lamp shades and called it hot cast porcelain, and now many forms of white glass are sold as porcelain. It has ceased to be a lie because all the world knows that the term is purely conventional.

The phrase "antique oak" has gradually come to mean, in the language of the cheap furniture makers, stained ash or even poorer material, and the rug importers have contributed to trade the verb "to antique," with its past participle "antiqued," the form commonly used. "Mahogany" will soon mean in the language of the cheap furniture trade any wood stained into distant imitation of new mahogany. Of course the latter in turn is stained to imitate old mahogany and is sold as such. Celluloid has become a counterfeit for almost anything, and its protean devices are immeasurable. It goes as often as not as ivory, and doubtless there are shopkeepers that sell it as such with no sense of fraud.

The terminology of the hardware trade is in a chaotic state by reason of the way in which counterfeits have obtained currency. "Steel hatchets," made of cheap iron, are sold at 25 cents, and the substitution of iron for steel runs all through the trade. The merchant gauges his customer and offers the counterfeit or the real, as the case seems to demand, without any sense of dishonesty. Electro plated iron goes for bronze, and cast iron goes for wrought iron. The fraud is so transparent to any one buying with his eyes open that it scarcely seems worth quarreling about. The merchant acknowledges the nature of the counterfeit when pressed and takes no shame in the acknowledgment. Perhaps some of them never see the real thing and are innocent of even constructive fraud.

When it comes to leather goods, the same system of counterfeiting prevails. You may get what is technically called an "alligator skin" traveling bag at any price you wish to pay, but no man with an eye in his head is ever deceived by the transparent device, and the dealers deem it an innocent trick to please persons in search of what they cannot buy.—New York Sun.

Both Wrong.

A writer in Mr. Astor's Pall Mall Magazine sneers at the assertion in the Declaration of Independence of the American colonies that "all men are born free and equal."

Probably the English snob or the American truckler who wrote the article would have sneered just the same if he had quoted the passage correctly.

The declaration does not assert anything of the kind.

It is speaking of the natural, not of the social condition of mankind. It says that "all men are created free and equal," and so they are, and as the declaration continuing says, "Endowed by nature with certain inalienable privileges, among which are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness."

When Mr. Astor desires to play the lick spittle to the English, he should be careful not to misrepresent matters. Now let him set his writer to commenting on the English poet's declaration that "Britons can never be slaves."—Green Bag.

Is a necessity because the tonic of winter air is gone, and milder weather, increased moisture, accumulated impurities in the blood and debilitated condition of the body, open the way for that tired feeling, nervous troubles, and other ills. OLD BELLS IN NEW YORK.

Two Metal Messengers Whose Tones Have Sounded to Many Generations.

Whether it be due to patriotic or poetic instincts it is nevertheless true that a famous old bell always arouses a reminiscent feeling. Its very presence suggests a story—the glad cry of liberty, the joyous peals of wedding festivities, the somber tone of funeral processions. Weather stained and hoary, an old bell seems like a messenger of fate.

Hence it is not to be wondered at that the bell in the yard of the Collegiate church, at Fifth avenue and Twenty-ninth street, daily attracts a throng of inquiring faces, closely pressed against the high iron railing surrounding the church.

From the quaint Latin inscription on the bell one learns that it was sent in 1795 by the people of Amsterdam as a gift offering to the North church in New York, then at Fulton and William streets, where it had been erected in 1628.

Hanging high above the city, at Forty-eighth street and Fifth avenue, is another link that binds us to the past. This great bell bears this Dutch inscription:

"Een leegat aan de Neederdentsche Kirke, Niew York, 1731."

It appears from the old will of Colonel Abraham de Peyster that he ordered a bell to be made in Holland for the Middle church, then occupying the site of the old fort at the Battery. The people of Holland were so pleased at being thus remembered by one of their number in America that a great number of coins were thrown into the smelting pot which contained the metal for the bell as an evidence of their appreciation. During the Revolution the Middle church was put to strange uses. Removing the pulpit, gallery, pews and flooring, the British dragoons converted it into a riding academy.

John Oothout was granted permission from Commander in Chief Lord Howe to remove the De Peyster bell to a place of safety. Accordingly, in the most unobtrusive manner possible, the bell was sent to Chambersburg, Pa.

When peace was restored, the bell was hung in the steeple of the Middle church, afterward leased to the federal government for postoffice purposes, and which many remember as the old Postoffice building. A little more journeying and the De Peyster bell reached its present haven.

The Collegiate consistory carefully preserve the relics of their several churches. A pewter plate bearing the date 1769 and giving a history of the old North church is stowed away with a charter granted in 1696 by William III empowering them to incorporate themselves in New York. Here, too, is zealously guarded the old will of John Harpending, now yellow with age, bequeathing, in 1723, much of his land to the Collegiate corporation.—New York Herald.

HIS SMILE WENT WITH THE POSE.

The Model In the Life Class Smiled Simply For the Sake of Art.

An amusing incident occurred not long ago in a well known New York art school. The girl students were drawing from life a study of the "Dancing Faun." A good looking Italian boy was the model, and as he assumed the requisite pose his face became wreathed in smiles. He was gazing directly at the class, and each girl imagined the smile was directed at her.

"How very embarrassing," said a Long Island girl. "I wish to goodness he wouldn't grin at me."

In spite of the indignant glances cast at him the son of Italy continued to smile at the blushing girls.

Presently a stolid German girl looked up and noticed the smile, which she imagined was aimed directly at her.

"You schtop dot schmiling. We don't want you to schmile at us." The boy's figure instantly straightened up, and he stood before the class the very impersonation of offended dignity as he said:

"Ladies, I no smile at any one. I pose to you as ze 'Dancing Faun.' Ze smile goes wiz ze pose."—New York World.

The Courtship of Miles Standish.

Encouraged by the hearty welcome given to these two American poems, Longfellow, in 1858, published a third, "The Courtship of Miles Standish." In this he told no pathetic tale of parted lovers, nor did he draw on the quaint lore of the red men. He took his story from the annals of his own ancestors, the sturdy founders of New England. As it happened, he himself (like his fellow poet, Bryant) was a direct descendant of John Alden and Priscilla, the Puritan maiden, whose wooing he narrated. "The Courtship of Miles Standish" is only less popular than its predecessors, "Evangeline" and "Hiawatha." All three have been taken to heart by the American people, all were composed during the brightest years of the poet's life, when his family were growing up about him, when he was in the full possession of his powers and had already achieved fame.—Professor Brander Matthews in St. Nicholas.

Lablache's Voice.

Lablache had the most magnificent bass voice ever known to the lyric stage. It had a compass of two octaves, from E flat below to E flat above the bass staff. He was a man of prodigious size and strength, and his voice was proportioned to his physical dimensions. Nothing was able to overcome or drown it, and through the tones of the largest chorus it boomed out as lustily as though alone. More than once he broke a window pane by the strength of the vibrations caused by his monstrous voice.

The Correct Term.

"Do you know the count actually addresses her in public as his treasure?"

"Treasure? His English is a little off. He means investment."—Indianapolis Journal.

AERIAL NAVIGATION.

The Theory of Professor Wellner's Sail Wheel Flying Machine.

The essence of Professor Wellner's innovation is his invention of the sail wheel. It consists of a horizontally placed axle with spokes and arched aeroplanes attached to them in a cylindrical form. While revolving round the axle the latter take a slightly slanting position, which causes the forward edges of these surfaces to be inclined, and consequently to compress the air in the way of a sail or a kite, calling into play the vertical force. Three ribs running across each lifting surface and made in the form of a screw at the same time serve to strengthen the aeroplanes and to add to the horizontal force.

These sail wheels set in pairs can be placed, according to the size of airship aimed at, in one or more groups of two wheels, revolving in opposite directions, behind or beside each other. The cigar shaped car, furnished with a motor and carrying the aeronauts, is attached horizontally under the center of the wheels, so that the whole construction will resemble a colossal bird, propelled, instead of by wings, by revolving wheels, the lifting surfaces of which are concentively and constantly developing vertical and horizontal power. The bird's movements in flying and the speedy headway motion necessary to the kite flying machines for their support in the air are in Professor Wellner's invention changed to a rotary motion. This construction, while permitting of an easy, slow ascent, assures the horizontal position and constant stability of the airship, at the same time permitting of a high velocity.

The more the latter is increased the stronger is the lifting power developed. The direction is given by a rudder at the end of the ship or by increasing the velocity of the sail wheels on one side only. It is the peculiar quality of these wheels that they do not, as might be supposed, disperse the air around them. They rather attract it toward their rapidly moving surface, condensing it to a powerful stream, which passes down obliquely through their cylinders. Their velocity can be made to surpass by far that of railway trains, thus enabling them to conquer contrary winds and air currents.—Miss Helene Bonfort in Popular Science Monthly.

Electricity Generated In His Mouth.

A curious case has been recorded in which an electric current was found to be generated by a plate of artificial teeth. A patient consulted his doctor on account of a severe pain in his tongue. But the sufferer was assured that there was nothing the matter. He then paid a visit to his dentist, who informed him that his teeth were perfectly sound. Being, however, dissatisfied, he called upon an electrician he knew and asked him if it were possible he could have any electricity in his mouth. On examining the teeth his friend found that two metals were used to fix them to a composition plate. To these metal wires were then attached and connected to a galvanometer. Then the teeth were replaced in the patient's mouth and the metals moistened with saliva. No sooner was this done than the galvanometer showed quite a large current from so small a source—enough, it is stated, to cause ulceration and severe pain when long continued upon so sensitive an organ as the tongue. The plate was covered with an insulating varnish, and thenceforward all the trouble ceased.—Industries and Iron.

New Remedy For Insomnia.

An expert in nervous disorders in Paris recommended to an American gentleman a cure for insomnia which was tried with such success that the patient has prescribed it to many of his friends. It is simply to keep your eyes open when you want to go to sleep and cannot. A person whose brain is too active will sometimes close the eyes and vainly endeavor to sleep. The very closing of the eyes seems to concentrate the menal faculties on business affairs and other distractions. The theory of the French physician is that if the victim of insomnia will fix his eyes upon some gleam of light, some shadow, or even on the darkness itself, he can relieve his mind from thoughts that perplex it and divert attention from himself. Try the experiment when you are sleepless and see how unconsciously your eyes will close and your thoughts begin to take possession of you. Struggle to keep them open and fixed upon an object, either real or imaginary, and before you are aware of it the struggle will have ended and sleep will be victorious.

The Effects of a Sermon.

Once, when Cardinal Manning was preaching in Rome, he recognized John Bright among his listeners. On the instant he determined to preach to him and dwelt with as much force and effect as he could on the claims of the Blessed Virgin to our veneration.

Two or three years later he met him and reminded him of this incident. "I remember it perfectly," said John, "and I shall never forget it. I was delighted with everything that morning"—a gratified smile came on the cardinal's face—"excepting your sermon."—"Memoirs of an Author," Fitzgerald.

Making Tea In Japan.

In making tea in Japan the hostess pours the powdered tea from the caddy and the water from the kettle simultaneously into a bamboo dipper, as a French waiter pours hot milk and coffee, and stirs it carefully with a "chosen" bamboo, one end of which is split into small slivers.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Zenobia, the queen of Palmyra, spoke seven languages. After being captured by the Romans she learned Latin and Greek also, married a Roman senator and lived the rest of her life as a Roman matron.

WAS A PHILOSOPHER.

A BEGGAR STUDENT OF HUMAN NATURE WHO HAD A SYSTEM.

Mendicancy Carried Out Upon Practical Lines—Why He Avoided the Rich—Stood Outside a Restaurant, but Never Begged From a Hungry Looking Man.

He was a wretched looking chap, so thinly clad that he was really an object of pity. He had sought a secluded corner at the entrance of a cheap restaurant near Herald square, and for awhile it seemed as if he had chosen the spot merely to escape the chilling blasts of the cutting wind. Many men passed into the place, but he spoke to none. Finally one who had just completed his meal came forth. The man started forward, hesitated a moment and then resumed his former position. Soon another man, apparently in a great hurry, came from the restaurant, buttoning his coat as he walked. In a moment the poor fellow stood in the way and barely had he uttered his request for help when he was rewarded with a dime.

A moment later a group of young men in very high spirits passed into the restaurant. To an ordinary student they would have been just the right men to approach for alms, but the beggar saw them not. It was only to certain men returning to the street that he made himself known. It was but the work of a moment to pick an acquaintance with the fellow, and when he found I was interested he talked freely of his plan.

"I had to do a good deal of thinking about it when I first started in," he said. "I can't get work now, and when I have work I can only keep at it for a little while on account of rheumatism. When I saw I had to beg, I thought I might as well do it right or not at all. If you know anything about men's faces and clothes, you don't have to do any guesswork at all. I can tell long before I get near a man what my chances are with him, and if I don't think that it's ten to one I will get something I don't try him, for there's no good in wearing yourself out and getting common. Some fellows go along the street and try to touch every well dressed man they meet. They couldn't do anything worse, for everybody sees what they're doing and knows they are professionals and steers clear of them. The only time to go up against well dressed men as a straight thing, without regard to their faces, is when they are full and feeling happy over it.

"The average well dressed man or woman is the hardest kind of a person to hit. They do lots for charity, but it's in a different way—societies, schools for kids, kindergartens and missions—and they think they are doing enough. If any one hits them on the street, they put them down for a professional. You have got to judge the well dressed people by their faces and general manner and let their clothes count for nothing.

"Whenever I have to do any street work, I always select the people of the lower middle classes, who don't put on any front—women especially. I mean people who live comfortably, but haven't got any too much money to spare. Say, you may think I'm stringing you, but I would rather have one nickel from one of them than a quarter from a fellow who could stand it and had it to burn. Funny, but I feel just as sentimental about that sometimes as if I was earning it, and I would earn it if I had the chance.

"Now, you take this stand of mine here today. There's three men who gave me something—two nickels and a dime. I have been here half an hour and I've only struck five men. I missed two. Well, three out of five don't look like bad guesswork, if you want to call it so, does it? This is the cheapest restaurant in the neighborhood. There's the Imperial, Marlborough and all the other big hotel restaurants I could have taken, but I'll bet I wouldn't have got a thing from the people who came from any of them. The men who go in here don't pay over 25 or 30 cents for what they eat, and I'm willing to take my chances with them right along.

"I always wait till a man comes out. Some people think it ought to be the other way, for the reason that a man who was hungry would be more apt to give out of sympathy for the man who was hitting him for money for something to eat. But I didn't figure it out that way. You see, these are pretty hard times, and there's more people in hard luck than there ever was before. Now, it's bad enough to be in hard luck, but it's worse yet to be hungry, and when a man is up against both games little things will bother him that wouldn't affect him at all if he had his stomach full. I reason that pretty nearly every man who comes in here is either in hard luck or else he is a miser who don't want to spend any more than is actually necessary. If it wasn't so, you know they would all go to the big restaurants in the hotels, for you know as well as I do that the right kind of a man likes good things to eat and nice clean service if he can afford it.

"Well, I am onto the misers, and I leave them alone. When the decent man comes out, he feels better for having had his dinner. He is ready for business, and life is a great deal brighter to him than it was half an hour before. I ask him to help me. He says to himself: 'Well, I feel pretty good. This fellow is in worse luck than I am. I know what it is to feel hungry. I won't miss the nickel very much,' and then I get it. When he hands it to me, he feels better for it, and he looks it, too, and if he has been doing things that are not quite up to the limit he consoles himself with the fact that he ain't such a bad fellow after all. And he ain't either. So you see there's two of us happy, and if there was more of it the world would be happier. Thanks, boss."

Then the philosopher went in to dinner.—New York Herald.

Lord Clive was thin and keen faced. He had the appearance of a man always worn down by lack of food and rest.

40 YEARS THE STANDARD.

MRS. PARNELL UNCONSCIOUS.

Mother of the Irish Leader Probably Assaulted and Robbed.

BORDENTOWN, N. J., April 20.—Mrs. Delia T. Parnell, mother of the late Charles Stewart Parnell, who lives at Ironside, overlooking the Delaware river near here, was found bleeding and unconscious by Charles Casey, son of the farmer who has charge of the farm at Ironsides. While descending a hill which marks the boundary of the property formerly occupied by Mrs. Parnell's father, young Casey heard the moans of some one apparently in distress. Hurrying to the spot from which the sound issued, he found Mrs. Parnell lying beside the fence with her face covered with blood. By her side were two small pieces of board, a piece of fence paling about three feet long, and a brick. Help was obtained, and she was carried to the house of Farmer Casey. Dr. Shipps, who was hastily summoned, made an examination and found that besides several bruises about the face, the woman had a lacerated wound on the right side of the head, from which the blood flowed freely.

Mrs. Parnell is unconscious and because of her advanced age, her condition is regarded as critical. The authorities are unable to determine whether she was assaulted or fell and received her injuries. Her hand bag was found alongside the railroad track near by, with her pocketbook missing and papers scattered in all directions. This circumstance lends an active probability to the theory that she was brutally assaulted and robbed. Mrs. Parnell frequently came to this place at night and remained until a late hour.

Mrs. Parnell May Die.

BORDENTOWN, N. J., April 22.—Mrs. Parnell passed a good night, but as the day advanced she grew weaker. It is doubtful whether she will survive the shock of the assault. Nothing has yet developed to throw any light upon the case, although the detectives are still at work.

CURZON-LEITER WEDDING.

Brilliant Assemblage Gave It the Character of a Public Ceremony.

WASHINGTON, April 23.—The wedding of Hon. George Nathaniel Curzon, M.P., and Miss Mary Leiter, was celebrated at St. Johns Episcopal church, amid scenes of much brilliancy, and in the presence of a brilliant assemblage of cabinet officers, diplomats, governors and bishops, as to give the event the character of a public ceremony.

The impressive marriage service of the Episcopal church was performed, after which the wedding party withdrew to the Leiter residence, where they were joined later by relatives and intimate friends for the wedding breakfast.

The bridal presents were numerous and exceptionally elegant, that of Mrs. Cleveland being a large silver loving cup.

GENERAL M'COOK RETIRES.

He Served Continuously in the Army For Forty-three Years.

DENVER, April 24.—After serving continuously in the service of the United States for a period of 43 years, Major General Alexander McDowell McCook has retired from the army, a step made necessary by the law, the age of 64 years having been reached. With the retirement of General McCook the last of the "fighting McCooks" goes into private life, and for the first time in nearly half a century the army will be without a McCook on its active rolls. It is a most noteworthy fact that General Daniel McCook, father of General McCook, and the sons, were all in the field fighting for their country at one time and that four of them attained the rank of general.

The Indian Territory Town Damaged to the Extent of $800,000.

ARDMORE, I. T., April 20.—Twenty-four hours ago Ardmore could boast of being the largest and most prosperous city in the Indian Territory. Now the entire business portion of the city is wiped out by fire and 150 business houses, among which were many two and three-story bricks, are a smouldering mass of ruins. The aggregate loss entailed is variously estimated at between $500,000 and $800,000, with the latter figures probably coming near the correct amount. The insurance will foot up to but one-third of the loss.

LEGISLATURE ADJOURNED.

Wisconsin Solons Finish Up the Business of the Session.

MADISON, Wis., April 22.—The 42d regular session of the Wisconsin legislature adjourned sine die at noon. At 11:45 o'clock the list of bills signed was sent to the senate and assembly. Swen Johnson and family arrived in this city last Friday from their former home at Waseca. They immediately began housekeeping in the Phil Zeh residence on South Main street. Mr. Johnson will at once begin the construction of a store building on his recently purchased lots south of Foldoe's jewelry store.

A great quantity of fish is now being caught at the dam by the use of nets. Our good people should bear in mind that all contrivances used in catching fish except a hook and line held in the hand or attached to a rod are contrary to law and a fine of ten dollars for each and every fish so caught may be adjudged upon conviction before a justice of the peace. Better stop it.

The prospect for getting logs down this spring is quite discouraging. The Meehan company have only enough on hand to supply the mill a couple of weeks and unless there are heavy rains very soon they will be unable to run their supply into the lake from tributary streams upon which they are banked. A spring like the present is unprecedented in these parts and may not be repeated for many years, but those who now have timber ready to run will doubtless suffer great losses by the unusual lack of water. It is also feared that the boats will be unable to run.

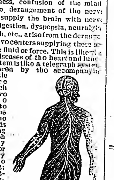
SURROUNDED BY MYSTERY!

A Great Mistake.

A recent discovery is that headache, dizziness, dullness, confusion of the mind, etc., are due to derangement of the nerve centers which supply the brain with nerve force; that indigestion, dyspepsia, neuralgia, wind in stomach, etc., arise from the derangement of the nerve centers supplying these organs with nerve fluid or force. This is likewise true of many diseases of the heart and lungs. The nerve system is like a telegraph system, as will be seen by the accompanying cut. The little white lines are the nerves which convey the nerve force from the nerve centers to every part of the body, just as the electric current is conveyed along the telegraph wires to every station, large or small. Ordinary physicians fail to regard this fact; instead of treating the nerve centers for the cause of the disorders arising therefrom they treat the part affected.



Franklin Miles, M. D., LL. B., the highly celebrated specialist and student of nervous diseases, and author of many noted treatises on the latter subject, long since realized the truth of the first statement, and his Restorative Nervine is prepared on that principle. Its success in curing all diseases arising from derangement of the nervous system is wonderful, as the thousands of unsolicited testimonials in possession of the company manufacturing the remedy amply prove.

Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine is a reliable remedy for all nervous diseases, such as headache, nervous debility, prostration, sleeplessness, dizziness, hysteria, sexual debility, St. Vitus dance, epilepsy, etc. It is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or sent direct by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid. Restorative Nervine positively contains no opiates or dangerous drugs.

MINNESOTA HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

MAJORITY REPORT.

Of the Judiciary Committee Relative to the Impeachment of

Frank Ives, Judge of the Fourteenth Judicial District.

TO THE HONORABLE, THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE STATE OF MINNESOTA:

MR. SPEAKER AND GENTLEMEN:

Your committee on Judiciary of the House of Representatives, to whom was referred the petition for the impeachment of Frank Ives, judge of the Fourteenth Judicial District of Minnesota, with instructions to send for witnesses and papers, and to examine into the truth of the matters in said petition alleged, and to report to this house thereon, respectfully report as follows:

Your committee decided to hold the investigation in executive sessions and to allow no attorney to represent either party in such investigation, but decided to allow witnesses to appear for the respondent as well as for the petitioners. A large amount of testimony has been taken and numerous records of the different counties constituting that district have been examined and received in evidence. The character and standing of the witnesses examined on both sides, have been in the main very good, and the contradictions in the testimony have been much less than might have been expected. The matter is one of the greatest importance to the people of that district as well as to the people of the state, and the investigation has been quite full and complete. Your committee have examined forty witnesses relative thereto, and have given the matter such careful consideration as its importance demands.

As to specifications or charges in the petition, numbered 1, 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, 15, 16 and 20, the committee find from the evidence that the same are true, but not such as would justify the investigation of Judge Ives, by the legislature, and not of sufficient gravity to warrant their consideration at this time.

As to specification No. 4, which is as follows:

"That at the general November, 1894, term of district court in Norman county, the said judge presiding, there were seven indictments against one Herrlager, and also other indictments against four other persons, all residents of Ada, in said county. All of said indictments were for unlawfully selling intoxicating liquors without a license therefor. That he, as such judge, through partiality and a disregard of the law, failed and refused to impose on the said persons, after they had pleaded guilty to said indictments, any penalty which the law prescribes, but, in violation of the law, and through an agreement with the defendants, imposed as the only penalty and sentence upon each of them, for each indictment to which they plead guilty, a fine of $50."

Your committee find the charge to be true. It is the duty of a judge to impose the penalty required by law. He has no authority to do otherwise. The action of Judge Ives in this respect was in violation of the law, and it appears to us from the evidence, and by the admissions contained in his answer to the petition, an knowingly utter disregard of the laws of the State of Minnesota, and in violation of his oath of office.

In one of the cases referred to, the judge fined the defendant, who plead guilty to a similar offense, the sum of $25, whereas the minimum fine prescribed by the statute is $50, and imprisonment for not less than thirty (30) days.

As to the eighth specification in this petition, the evidence, mostly consisting of the records, shows this to be true, as alleged in the petition, and shows that the judge was illegally exercising an arbitrary power, resulting in discrediting and injuring Mr. Montague, an attorney of Crookston, for an opinion on a question of law which Mr. Montague had given in his own office, and which opinion appears also to have been correct.

As to the ninth specification in the petition, the arrest of Russell, Quigley and Dwyer for an alleged contempt of court, the essential part of the proof consists of the records in these cases, and this charge, as specified in the petition is found to be true. The arrest was made by order of the judge, based on two affidavits, the material part of which affidavits were sworn to only on information and belief, and the facts alleged in these affidavits, and in the order of arrest based thereon, were not sufficient to constitute any offense. The arrest was not justifiable. Quigley

JAPAN WILL NOT RECEDE.

Protest of Russia, France and Germany to Go Unheeded.

LONDON, April 27.—Direct and positive information from official sources is at hand concerning the exact negotiations between Russia, France and Germany on one hand and Japan on the other. The Russian, French and German ministers separately interviewed the vice minister of foreign affairs, under instructions from their respective governments and presented memorandums in which it was stated that the governments of Russia, France and Germany, upon examining the terms of peace imposed by Japan upon China, have found that the possession of the peninsula of Lia Tong, claimed by Japan, would be a constant menace to the capital of China, and at the same time would threaten and render it non-effective in fact. Consequently the governments of France, Russia and Germany, desiring to show their sincere friendship for the government of Japan, advises it to renounce the absolute and final possession of the peninsula of Lia Tong. The memoranda of the three governments make it plain that they were presented in the way of friendly advice to the Japanese government and are not intended in any way to convey any open or covert menace.

Japan's reply, it is understood, while moderate and conciliatory in tone, will not contain any recession from what Japan regards as rightfully her due.

OBJECT TO LI'S TREATY.

Some of the Chinese Generals in Favor of Continuing the War.

SHANGHAI, April 27.—A dispatch received here from Pekin says that affairs there are in a critical state. Some of the generals are in favor of continuing the war. The censors object to Li Hung Chang and the terms of the treaty of peace between China and Japan, and the officials are claiming that the emperor alone should decide upon the terms. The ratification of the treaty consequently is uncertain, and if the treaty is ratified it is feared there will be trouble with the army.

REVISE PEACE TERMS.

Such a Report Is Current on the Paris Bourse.

PARIS, April 29.—It is reported on the bourse here that Japan has agreed to revise the terms of the treaty of peace with China, as desired by the intervening powers.

England Would Support Japan.

SHANGHAI, April 29.—It is reported here that a high official in the North is authority for the statement that England will support Japan, who will refuse to listen to the remonstances of the other powers regarding the terms of the treaty of peace with China, which gives the Japanese possession of Chinese territory. A dispatch received from a private source in Japan says that the condition of affairs between Russia and Japan is beginning to look very serious.

WON A GREAT VICTORY.

Insurgents Routed by Spanish Troops With Great Loss.

HAVANA, April 30.—The government troops under General Salcedo have won a great victory over the insurgent forces commanded by General Maceo. Many of the latter were killed or wounded and the rest were dispersed and are seeking refuge in the mountains. In addition Garza's band has been completely routed with great loss in killed, wounded and prisoners. Nearly all the remainder of his band surrendered.

Private advices from Cuba state that General Flor Crombet was not killed in the battle but was assassinated. He was surrounded by Spanish troops and requested an interview with the Spanish officer in command. The conference ended and Crombet turned to go, when a soldier in ambush shot him in the back of the head. A part of Crombet's band was captured and the remainder fled to the mountains.

CHANGED RECEIVERS.

Bondholders Get Control of the Chicago and Northern Pacific Road.

CHICAGO, April 30.—The bondholders' committee of the Chicago and Northern Pacific railroad secured the appointment of A. Lawrence Hopkins of New York as the receiver of the road in place of Warner Van Norden, Richard P. Morgan and Henry E. Howland. Judge Jenkins of the United States circuit court made the appointment. The bondholders' committee represents $24,000,000 of the bonds of the company made up largely of the German interests, reputed to be controlled by Henry Villard and the Rockefeller interests. In addition there are $4,000,000 more of bonds whose representative is the Farmers' Loan and Trust Company of New York, the trustee under the mortgage securing the bonds. This latter interest was represented before Judge Jenkins and joined in asking for the appointment of Mr. Hopkins.

HE FAVORS FREE COINAGE.

Says the Contest Is Certain to Result in Victory for That Principle.

INDIANAPOLIS, April 30. — Senator Voorhees, in a talk with The Sentinel Washington correspondent, made the following statement of his views in regard to the free coinage of silver:

"I do not regret the agitation of the silver question. Sooner or later it has to be definitely settled whether the labor producing people of this country can be bullied out of one-half of their debt paying money, or whether they will stand up like free men and protect and defend the money named and provided in the constitution—gold and silver, or both—not one of the precious metals alone, but both, and on terms and conditions as to coinage and use of absolute equality. That is the question immediately before us, and no better time than now will ever be found for its settlement.

Silver the Issue.

"The tariff will not return to plague us again for years to come, and no great national question is at this time in the way of a full discussion of the currency question. The silver question itself is plainer to view and less obscured by the craft of its enemies than at any time since the assassination of silver money took place in 1873. There are no legislative switches now in existence to lead the people away from the main track. No cowardly makeshifts or insincere shams can any longer darken discussion or betray honest counsels.

"The real and vital issue now presented to the American people is the proposed elimination of silver from our currency, its total as a money metal and the use of gold alone. This is what is now meant by the movement against the free coinage of silver, whatever disclaimers may be made to the contrary. This movement means the destruction of one-half of the debt paying money of the United States and of the world. If it should be successful it will double the burdens on every debtor and multiply the gains and income of every creditor wherever the sun shines.

"The debts of the American people at this time, both public and private, are appalling in amount. They have been contracted on a bimetallic basis, and it is now proposed to make them payable on the basis of gold alone. I have not a particle of doubt as to the result of the contest now going on. The enemies of silver will be driven to the wall. Silver money will not only survive, but it will be fully restored to its old place as a leading and controlling factor in the development and the progress of the country.

Always Favored Free Coinage.

"Nor have I any fear for the future strength and harmony of the Democratic party. Some men may discard its principles and abandon its organization, but others will take their places. I have been in favor of the free coinage of silver at the ratio fixed by Jefferson all my life, and, whatever others may do, I shall hereafter neither abandon my principles nor my party. I am not unmindful of the vague cry now raised about 'sound money,' 'honest money,' and it causes me to glance back over the career of of silver in American history. I discover that Washington, Jefferson, Hamilton, Madison, John Marshall and Monroe endorsed silver money as sound and honest, and that the same views were entertained throughout the most important epochs of our country's trials, growth and glory, by Jackson, Clay and Webster, Calhoun, Silas Wright, Marcy, Horatio Seymour, Benton, Chase, Douglas, Hendricks and Abraham Lincoln."

GOOD NEWS.

The North Dakota Milling Association matters had progressed so far on Saturday as to permit of the appointment of a receiver in each state, Minnesota and North Dakota. This means that the mills can soon resume operations on full time. If the matters had so shaped themselves as to cause a total suspension of work for the summer it would have been tough, not only on the operatives but also on the country tributary—to the farmers because the mills have been paying the best prices for wheat, and to the rest of us because the stocks of flour would have been soon exhausted. This arrangement is for the best interest of all concerned.

ROUSED THE REDS.

Attempt of Marshal Cronan to Arrest a Turtle Lake Indian.

DEVILS LAKE, N. D., April 30.—United States Marshal Cronan attempted to arrest an Indian named Demery at St. Johns for stealing government timber. A crowd of Indians, headed by Chief Little Shell, armed with knives, hatchets, etc., advanced in a threatening manner, compelling Cronan to release his prisoner. Marshal Cronan endeavored to have a Catholic priest persuade the Indians not to resist the law, but he refused to interfere. Marshal Cronan has returned and will await further instructions before making another attempt to arrest the Indians.

Marshal Cronan and several deputies went up Saturday to aid Schindler to arrest the Canadian Indians and their American relatives indicted for timber depredations. Commissioner Hoynes and others recommended the of the Canadian halfbreeds, and Indian Agents Waugh, Breener and Cramsie opposed on their belief that only a small proportion of the Indians were entitled to be considered Canadian Indians, and the halfbreeds rushed in, expecting to share in the settlement of the 9,000,000 tract claimed in this district by the Indians. The rights of about 2,300 were recognized. Six or seven hundred were excluded. These latter cause the trouble. They commit depredations on government lands have burned houses of rightful settlers, cut wood and sold large quantities at St. Johns, and, in case of trouble, usually send to Washington a remonstrance with Chief Little Shell's name signed.

LABOR RIOT AT CHICAGO.

Three Persons Seriously Injured Before Quiet Was Restored.

CHICAGO, April 30.—A reduction from 12 to 8 cents a ton for heaving coal brought on a lively riot at the docks of the O. S. Richardson Coal company. Three men were injured, none seriously, however. It required the presence of 20 officers to quell the disturbance. They quickly drove back the crowd, but were compelled to fire several shots in the air to cow the strikers. The Richardson company declared that it reduced the scale because the men could make $4 a day at 8 cents a ton, and they thought that under the present conditions of business that was enough for them to pay. Several other coal firms have declared that they will not pay more than 8 cents, and more trouble is looked for when the coal season is fairly on.

BRITISH FLAG FLOATS

ENGLISH TROOPS OCCUPY THE PORT OF CORINTO.

Nicaragua, However, Declares the Port Closed, and Puts a New Phase on the Situation—The British Commander Is Awaiting Further Orders.

WASHINGTON, April 29.—The British have occupied Corinto and the British flag has been raised over the city. Dr. Guzman received two cablegrams at 12:30 p. m. giving him the first official information. The cablegrams were very brief and stated only these essential facts and also that the landing was made at 1 o'clock a. m. All is quiet, as the Nicaraguan population, Dr. Guzman says, have vacated the town, leaving it completely in the possession of the British troops.

AWAITING FURTHER ORDERS.

British Admiral Undecided as to Occupying More Territory.

NEW YORK, May 1.—A special to The World from Corinto, Nicaragua, (by special courier to Paso de Caballos, April 28,) says:

The town is perfectly quiet. The British are organizing their government. An officer of the cruiser Royal Arthur tells The World correspondent that the next two days will decide whether they occupy more territory, including Paso de Caballos, or withdraw altogether, as important telegrams are expected from England.

The messenger who takes this carries two telegrams from General Stephenson, one for the British foreign office, the other for the admiralty office.

MANY RUMORS AT WASHINGTON.

State Department Not Advised of the Proposed Arbitration.

WASHINGTON, April 30.—While there were many wild rumors flying about the city touching the state of affairs at Corinto, some to the effect that the difficulty had been patched and that the British had withdrawn on the basis of a submission of the British claim to arbitration, and others to show that the British had extended their original programme so as now to include the dispatch of a fleet of warships to collect a debt owing by Honduras, it appeared that none of them had any real basis. The state department evidently looks upon the possibility of a revolution in Nicaragua as the phase of the case possessing great importance just now, and which it regards as the absolutely essential one to provide against, so far as it

Threatens American Interests,

among which, of course, are included those of the Nicaraguan canal. The story of a contemplated onslaught on Honduras is regarded as absurd, as there is no justification for any such action. So far as the rumors of arbitration are concerned, the state department was not advised, up to the close of office hours, and did not credit the story, but that it expects a settlement of the trouble between Great Britain and Nicaragua in a short time is evidenced by the fact that they still express confidence in the payment of the indemnity.

OUT COLLECTING.

England Will Now Make a Descent on Honduras.

WASHINGTON, April 30.—Great Britain has decided to send her bad debt collecting squadron to Honduras. It is said she has so notified the financial representatives of that country. The notification goes on to state that Great Britain will take possession of certain ports in Honduras and collect the revenue until the amount of her indebtedness to the English bondholders is liquidated. Nearly 20 years ago Honduras defaulted on bonds placed in England, and the interest has since been accumulating until, at the present time, between $2,000,000 and $3,000,000 is due.

This information, which was received here through a private source in London, has caused something of a sensation among the few who know it. The collection of such a large debt from Honduras, people familiar with affairs in that country, state is impossible, and if the British act in accordance with the threat, which is said on high authority to have been made, it will amount, as in Egypt, to a perpetual occupation of that nation.

ASKED FOR INSTRUCTIONS.

England Informed That Corinto Is a Useless Possession.

NEW YORK, April 30.—A World Managua special says: Admiral Stephenson cabled to London asking instructions as to what to do next. He informed the British admiralty that Corinto is a useless possession under present conditions, having no business and no means of communicating with the interior. He asks whether he shall seize San Juan and other ports. The natives in some way became aware of this dispatch, which aroused riotous sentiment.

Don't Want the Canal.

LONDON, April 30.—The Daily News, in an editorial on the Nicaraguan affair, says: The Nicaraguan canal was and is essentially an American enterprise. It is proper to bear this in mind in all our proceedings and to spare no pains to convince the American people, as we have already convinced their government, that we covet the canal no more than we covet Nicaragua.

THE WEIGHERS ARE ALL RIGHT

J. G. McGrew Talks Entertainingly of the Benefits of The State Weighing System To The Farmers.

J. G. McGrew, Chief Weigher at Duluth was in the city on Thursday looking after his business interests. He says the lake is open and the lake season will begin in a few days, nearly a month earlier than usual. Speaking of the system pursued in his department Mr. McGrew said: "There seems to be an impression in the minds of farmers that the weighing department stands in with the elevator companies to defraud the farmer in weights, but if farmers thoroughly understood our system they would see how impossible this is. By this system exact accuracy is arrived at and I can assure you that every pound of wheat that arrives in a car is accounted for. On arrival of a train the numbers and initials of the cars are taken, the gaugers get in and take the average depth of wheat in the car thus being enabled to tell how much wheat is in it. When the car is unloaded the sweepers go in and clean out the car thoroughly, and they excercise more care than was formerly done, saving, I am sure to the shipper the whole expense of inspecting and weighing. Most of the weighers employed were once farmers themselves and have been selected for the purpose on account of their honesty. Some of them, when they came had the idea that the state system was corrupt but they now see and acknowledge their error. I wish, if your farmers have this idea, that they would send a committee down to Duluth this spring and look us up and report the result at the annual June meeting of the Polk county alliance. This would prove either the truth or the fallacy of the idea that the weighing department is in cahoote with the elevators, or anybody else, to rob the farmers."

MINNESOTA

At the National Educational Association.

The meetings of the National Educational Association (this year at Denver, July 5—12) have become great congresses for the discussion of current questions in popular education. Wide-awake and successful teachers come together from all over the Union to exchange stores of thought and experience. The ripest views of the best minds are thus given forth by personal contact. An excursion taken in connection with these meetings is a valuable addition to one's experience, and a practical help to the teacher.

Not the least of the benefits to teachers (this excursion is open to all) is the travel and contact with the world. Persons of all classes profit greatly in knowledge, acquaintance and health. A trip, such as one to Colorado this summer makes a great addition to one's material in history and geography, and returns her refreshed and enthusiastic to her work in the fall. There was never before offered such a brilliant list of attractions: Denver, the Rockies, the garden of the Gods, Toltec Gorge, the Black Canon, the Royal Gorge, Marshall Pass, St. Luis Valley, Animas Canon, Butte, Helena, Yellowstone Park, Salt Lake City, and a hundred other points. Fares are reduced lower than ever before: St. Paul and Denver, round-trip, $27.90; "1000 miles in the Rockies," "all about the Rockies" $20; Yellowstone Park, Butte, Helena, Salt Lake, and Denver and back to St. Paul about $50; many other attractions. For information address Professor D. L. Kiehle, University of Minnesota Minneapolis, State Manager, N. E. A., or S. S. Parr, Supt. City Schools, St. Cloud, Minn.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

From our Regular Correspondent.

WASHINGTON, April 26, 1895.

No democrat should ever say "Munroe doctrine" again. The administration, after having allowed poor little Nicaragua to suppose that it would be protected against the rapacity of Great Britain, has been cajoled or bulldozed—it matters not which—into keeping its hands off while England forcibly compels the little republic to do just what is demanded by the British. Senator Hill was right when he said the Munroe doctrine was meaningless. But it is only when interpreted by a democratic administration that it is meaningless. It has always meant just what it purports to mean—European hands off American counties—when republican presidents were in office, and it has been so understood by all European governments. An instance, was the tottering and fall of the Maximillian government in Mexico, which the Third Napoleon tried to establish while the U. S. was busy fighting the civil war, at a few words from President Lincoln.

Mr. Cleveland now realizes that if he attempts to carry out his announced programme of compelling every Federal officeholders, large and small, to take an active part in the fight against silver which he has started inside the democratic party, he will have an open revolt on his hands. Prominent silver democrats are giving Mr. Cleveland a chance to back down by publicly stating their belief that Mr. Cleveland has been misrepresented, and that he never had any such intention. Of course they know that he did have that intention, and they fear that he still has it. It is well known that a large majority of the Federal officials in the south and west are silver men. A democratic Senator says Mr. Cleveland will find himself formally read out of the democratic party, if he persists in trying to carry out that programme.

Mrs. U. S. Grant, her daughter, Mrs. Nellie Grant Sartoris and her grand daughter, Miss Rose Sartoris, went to Chicago, last week to attend the celebration of Gen. Grant's birthday, under the auspices of the Chicago Press Club.

Civil Service reform will lose one of its most courageous advocates by the resignation of Civil Service Commissioner Roosevelt to become Police Commissioner of New York city. This stepping from the head of a national commission to become a member of a municipal commission, even of the great city of New York, is not a promotion in any sense of the word for Mr. Roosevelt; but he is a New Yorker and was unable to stand the home pressure brought to secure his help in the reformation of the abuse in New York police circles which have scandalized the city. The people of New York are to be congratulated on the change, but there are no reasons for extending the congratulations to Mr. Roosevelt.

Representative Tawney, of Minnesota, at present in Washington, says he hasn't been able to see the increase in the sentiment in favor of the free and unlimited coinage of silver, regardless of other nations, which he has heard about since he came to Washington. Referring to a published interview in which Secretary Nosley, of the Interstate Commerce Commission, declared that everything in Minnesota was going towards silver. Mr. Tawney said it reminded him of a story about a man who after walking about the swamps which used to surround the city of Duluth, approached a hotel-keeper with a proposition to sell him a carload of frog's legs. The hotel man didn't want so many, but agreed to buy a bushel. The next day the seller turned up with four pairs of frog's legs, and when the hotel keeper indignantly said to him: "Why I thought you said you could get a car load," he replied "I did; I thought from the noise they made that the swamps were full of 'em, but these were all I could catch."

Two members of President Harrison's cabinet—Senator Proctor and ex-Attorney General Miller—have declared most positively their ignorance of any intention on the part of Gen. Harrison to become a candidate for renomination by the next republican National convention, and Senator Proctor added that he was not committed to any candidate, and that any republican would be satisfactory to him.

Mr. Cleveland's implied rebuke to Secretary Morton for having come out flat-footed for a single gold standard was about the same sort of a rebuke that a certain class of merchants are in the habit of giving their clerks in the presence of some customer who complains of having been duped by misrepresentation. It will be noticed that Mr. Cleveland did not once say in the interview he furnished the press that he did not agree with Secretary Morton. He contented himself by saying that Mr. Morton had not been authorized to speak for him. The only mistake made by Secretary Morton was in supposing that Mr. Cleveland was willing to have his opinions expressed to the public just as he had expressed them to the cabinet.

"The People of the Northwest portion of the United States can congratulate themselves on having the elegant traveling accommodations offered by the North-Western line between Minneapolis, St. Paul and Chicago which the wealthiest and oldest roads in the effete East have not yet found it possible to excel.—The Times, Monticello, Minn.

A YOUNG GIRL'S FORTUNE.

AN INTERESTING SKETCH.

Nothing appeals so strongly to a mother's affection as her daughter just budding into womanhood. Following is an instance: "Our daughter, Blanche, now 15 years of age, had been terribly afflicted with nervousness, and had lost the entire use of her right arm. She was in such a condition that we had to keep her from school and abandon her music lessons. In fact, we feared St. Vitus dance, and are positive but for an invaluable remedy she would have had that terrible affliction. We had employed physicians, but she received no benefit from them. The first of last August she weighed but 75 pounds, and although she has taken only three bottles of Nervine she now weighs 106 pounds; her nervousness and symptoms of St. Vitus dance are entirely gone, she attends school regularly, and studies with comfort and ease. She has recovered complete use of her arm, her appetite is splendid, and no money could procure for our daughter the health Dr. Miles Nervine has brought her.

When my brother recommended the remedy I had no faith in patent medicines, and would not listen to him, but as a last resort he sent us a bottle, we began giving it to Blanche, and the effect was almost immediate."—Mrs. R. R Bullock, Brighton, N. Y.

Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or sent direct by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid. It is positively free from opiates or dangerous drugs.

CHAPTER XXIV.

COMING OF THE RESERVES.

The night has come again. The smoke has rolled away from the battlefield of Chickamauga. There is neither sound of cannon nor musketry, except here and there an occasional picket firing. There is another sound within the dark forest where Thomas' men are resting—the sound of the woodchopper's ax. The commander in chief of the Confederates hears it and knows, with a general's quick perception, that another chance of destroying his enemy is passing. He cannot enter the forest at the dead of night to stop that chopping, and he knows as he hears hundreds of axes replacing the more appalling sounds of the day with the clatter of their blades, and now and again some great tree crashing through its neighbors, that by morning his enemy will be intrenched behind breastworks.

Maynard bivouacked on Thomas' line. The two armies lay too near to each other to light telltale campfires, and as all equipage had been sent to the rear and blankets were scarce the army spent the night shivering. The wood was too thick to see anything above the lower branches. The men needed sleep, but it would be as easy to sleep on the battlefield as in the continuous clatter of those axes. Besides distrust had come upon the whole army. It was an anxious night to the generals, and the men partook of the solicitude of their commanders. It was known that the enemy had been re-enforced from Virginia, Knoxville and other points. It was rumored that Burnside was coming, but Burnside did not come. To a natural fatigue was added that more appalling weariness of being constantly in the presence of death and the certainty that when the soldier should rise in the morning the grim specter would rise with him to haunt him for another day.

There is a streak of gray in the east. The commander in chief of the men in gray listens for the sound of guns in the hands of those he has ordered to begin the attack at daylight and which are to be signal for others. The streak broadens; day comes; the sun rises; it is 8 o'clock. Still all is silent along the line. It is only a mistake, only an order not received or understood by the general who was to lead off, but in that mistake is involved possible failure. With all the vaunted generalship on the field of battle what is it, after all, that turns the tide except the mistakes?

Mark Maynard on that Sunday morning was lying with his body in the dirt and his head on the root of a tree. He dreamed that he had just come in from making a charge at the head of his brigade and was approaching his commander to report a glorious success; that the general said to him after thanking him for his achievement, "Colonel, it will give me pleasure to recommend you for promotion to the rank of brigadier"—

"General!"

He awoke and saw Jakey Slack looking down on him. It was he who had spoken the word "General!"

"General," said Jakey as he saw his friend's eyes open, "it's ben a d——d hard fight."

"For heaven's sake, my boy, where have you been, and what are you doing here? The battle will open soon again this morning. I wonder it hasn't opened already. You must get back."

"I thort I war a sojer."

"Well, Jakey, you are a soldier, that's a fact, and I'm not."

"Reckon I'll git cashyered. I ben away 'thout any furlough."

"Where?"

"Waal, I thort I'd go 'n see Souri afore th' fight cos I moughtn't hev no chance after it. I mought git killed, 'n then I wouldn't bo no good nohow."

"Have you seen her?"

"Yas."

"And Laura?" he started up.

"Yas."

"And you told her"—

"Reckon."

Maynard paused in his questions. He dreaded to know how his wife had received the news. Did she condemn him with the rest?

Jakey put his hand in the pocket of his coat and took out a card on which was a picture of Laura holding her child. Maynard seized it, and in a moment his eyes were riveted on it to the exclusion of all other objects. His mind drank in thirstily all it suggested.

"Mark," he exclaimed suddenly, "for these you must win back your spurs."

"Reckon she uns ud like fo' ter hear y' talk thet away," put in Jakey sympathetically.

"Jakey, I'm a changed man. I feel that I am to have a chance to vindicate myself on the field today. For two days I have been fighting in the ranks. I have had only a private's opportunity, and that is to furnish material for the sacrifice demanded by the god of war, while the god only smiles on those who lead the victim. Today—today"—

"Somep'n'll turn up sho', y' bet."

"Come, we must get some breakfast. We'll need it soon. This day will decide the fate of the Army of the Cumberland."

Going to a group of soldiers near by, from whose campfire emanated the pleasing odor of boiling coffee, the two asked and received a breakfast.

A fog hung over the valley of the Chickamauga which screened the two armies from each other. Maynard and Jakey were ignorant of their surroundings a hundred yards distant, so they munched their "hard tack" and swallowed their coffee, quite willing to be hidden from Confederate fire while they were doing so. Meanwhile Jakey gave his friend an account of his trip and how he had arrived on the field at noon the day before.

"How did you find me, Jakey?" asked the hearer.

"Waal, I ast a good many sojers, 'n none of 'em knew whar y' war. 'Bout dark I heard one o' th' cavalry of th' old brigade, our brigade, thet knew y'. He was a-tellin how y' went with 'em in a charge. They all liked ter hev yer do thet away. I ast him whar I mought find y', 'n he reckoned he sor y' goin up this way. So I kem 'n found y'. Thet's all."

As he finished Maynard exclaimed:

"Look!"

The fog had suddenly lifted. They were on a ridge which had been fortified during the night, the works resembling a horseshoe. Their position was on the left side of the shoe and commanded a view up the Chattanooga road, which ran directly north from where they were. There a short distance east of the road and overlapping the Union left the lifting mist revealed a line of Confederate gray. As Maynard spoke, with a shout they rushed forward and took possession of the prize they had been trying to grasp for two days. They were between the Union army and Chattanooga.

Leaving Jakey where they were and instructing him to stay there till he should return, Maynard went down to take a hand in the fight. He found a dead soldier, whose musket and cartridge box he seized, and pushing on to the line of firing took position with an infantry regiment. The enemy, unsupported, were driven from the Chattanooga road to a ridge near by, where they halted and gave their pursuers a desperate fight. Then the regiment to which Maynard had allied himself was ordered to another part of the field, and he went with them. Passing through a thick fire of bullets, which were mingled with the larger missiles of cannon, he encountered a sight that has seldom been seen on the field of battle. Crouching under a log was a little girl about 8 years old, who, having got caught in among the disputants, was right in the midst of a battlefield. Maynard never forgot the contrast between the terrified child and the unmerciful scenes surrounding her. Being a volunteer, he was under no man's orders except as he chose to obey them. Falling out of the ranks, he went to the child, took her up in his arms, and while bullets pinged about them and shells screeched above them carried her to the rear, to where he had left Jakey.

"Here, Jakey," he said, setting her down by the boy, "it's time you have a sweetheart, so I've brought you one. She comes to you from the field of battle and probably won't stand any nonsense. So you must treat her with proper deference."

"Golly!" exclaimed the boy, squaring himself before the weeping girl, with his hands in his pockets.

"Take her to that house down there and wait till I come—that is, if I ever come, and if I don't tell my wife to look out for this little one, and if necessary provide for her. I must go. There is hard fighting at the front."

Jakey took the little girl by the hand and led her away, while Maynard went over to the south slope of the ridge to see what was going on at the right. Standing on an eminence, he looked down on the contending lines toward the south.

The sun was now standing midway between the horizon and the meridian. The day had thus far gone without any especial advantage on either side. Finding the left strong, the Confederate commander was massing troops on the right of the line of blue. Maynard could see them marching into position for a gigantic effort.

There was a momentary lull in the firing on the right, and Maynard thought that from a distance he caught the faintest sound of a church bell. It might have been fancy, for congregations would not be likely to meet near a battlefield, and the continued roar in the center and left would likely have prevented a bell being heard. At any rate, it suddenly occurred to him that it was Sunday morning.

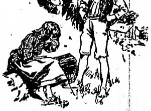
Sunday morning! What a contrast between that and other Sunday mornings he had passed. It was near 11 o'clock, the hour when people were assembling for worship, and he pictured the neatly dressed throngs moving to church while bells were ringing in the belfries. All over the broad land congregations were assembling, unmindful of the struggle that was going on at Chickamauga.

The enemy were moving to the attack. As Maynard glanced toward the Union line to see if it was in condition he saw a division face to the left and begin a march in rear of another division, leaving its place in the line a defenseless, yawning gap.

"Great heavens! Some one has blundered."

"Halt! Go back! Great God, what are you doing?"

Who could hear him at such a distance? Who would obey him if heard? Oh, the agony of a sight like that! To see men marching not only to their own destruction, but the destruction of their comrades, doubtless of the whole army, and without the power to prevent them. Oh, for a battery with which to fire smoke over that deathtrap—to conceal it! Oh, for a cyclone to blow dust in the eyes of those Confederates! God grant that the stupidity which prevails in war may seize those southern generals now; that they may not reap this offered advantage. May they be blinded! God, this is terrible!



"Golly!" exclaimed the boy.

"There! They see it. They are preparing to march through it. There they go. Hear those cheers—that rebel yell. They're near it. They're in it. Our men are breaking on the right of the gap. There goes a regiment, a whole brigade on the left. Heavens, how those gray coats leap forward! It's a splendid sight if they are Confederates. They know it's all up with us. The whole right of the army is giving way, broken, scattering pellmell over the field, chased by the southerners pouring volley upon volley after them.

"Stop and rally! No! No one could rally troops on the breast of Niagara. But there's a crumb of comfort—those men nearest this way are bending back like wrought iron. They are not breaking. Good. There's a faint hope for the left. But, O Lord, what's the left with the right and center gone?"

And now comes a spectacle, a contrast which must always stand out a splendid monument of heroic endurance in the great cemetery of war—the spectacle of an army, one half routed, gone, driven like dry leaves before the wind, the remaining half holding in check for more than half a day a force against which the whole had found it difficult to contend. Standing in the center of the "horseshoe," the fortification of which his wisdom has constructed during the night, General Thomas, intent upon guiding the troops of his own corps, with no word from his commander in chief, for a time not knowing, or at least not admitting, that the army is by all the rules that govern the science of war defeated, goes on fighting as if there is but one Army of the Cumberland, and that composed of the troops under his command.

The right put to flight, the Confederates prepare to crush the remainder of the army. All around the "horseshoe" they gather their forces and hurl them against the blue coats. The first onset fails. There must be another. A second waves goes rolling on and dashes against the logs behind which the one armed Army of the Cumberland is fixed. It recedes without making a breach. It will need more such waves—a constantly beating surf. Surely that curve, with flanks bent almost in a circle, almost touching, cannot be called a line of battle. It may be a curve of battle, but how can such a curve stand against the whole Army of the Tennessee?

But this curved array of bayonets is too tough to be broken in front. It must be taken in flank. There is a ridge just beyond the right heel of the "horseshoe." It has been abandoned by the Unionists. No one seems to know why. Climb up, Confederates; seize this ridge. It commands the Union right. Once firmly lodged there you can hammer them unmercifully.

And the gray coats do climb the ridge and drag artillery with them.

The Union commander sees them and at a glance discerns that without a force to drive them from it his army is lost. There is no such force. Every man is engaged and needed where he is. The general's brow is knit, and his square mouth sets even more firmly than before.

"There is a cloud of dust rising over there to the north, general, and men marching under it," said an aid. "I wonder who they are."

It makes a great difference to the hounded general whether they are friends or enemies. He looks anxiously in the direction pointed out by his aid and orders him to reconnoiter the uncertain column. The officer rides forward to a point where he can get a good view, draws rein, dismounts, and climbing a fence brings a fieldglass to bear on the advancing troops. They are far from him. They are covered with dust, and their flags are furled, so that he cannot tell whether they are blue or gray. If they are gray, that means destruction for the troops defending themselves in the horseshoe. If they are blue, they may serve as a forlorn hope on the ridge commanding the Union right.

The aid not only sees these troops, but the troops see the aid. They, too, wonder if he is blue or gray. Neither can tell, but from his position they suspect him to wear blue. At any rate, they assume that he does.

Suddenly every flag is unfurled, displaying the stars and stripes.

Enough. Mounting his horse, the aid rides over the ground between him and the head of the advancing column.

"Who are these troops?"

"The first division of the reserve corps."

Posted at the opening of the struggle to guard a bridge across the Chickamauga on the extreme north of the battlefield, with orders to hold it at all hazards, this division had for two days listened to the sounds of fighting without firing a shot. The Confederates had made a crossing without using the bridge watched, and the division was a useless guard. On Sunday morning its commander, chafing at inaction, yet dreading the consequences that might occur, the blame attending a disobedience of orders, determined to burn the bridge and march to the relief of comrades whom he divined were being hard pressed. Gathering his principal officers in a church near by, he announced to them what he proposed to do. The little church, unused at that hour of that holy day to anything more vigorous than a minister pounding the pulpit or the strains of "Old Hundred," rang with the assenting acclamations of soldiers.

Marching through fields of yellow corn, guided only by a distant but continuous roar, the division each moment lessened the distance between it and the army whose fate hung on its quick coming. The direction taken led them toward the north side of the horseshoe and the rear of the Confederates. First a small body of Confederate cavalry, guarding a hospital, were met. These were easily scattered, and the column moved on. Striking the Chattanooga road, the division marched on down it. There were heights to the east, and on these were guns. It was plain to the gunners that the advancing column was a rescuing column. They opened fire to delay it. The Union troops did not heed them. There was a more important enemy—a more important work farther on.

But they were marching directly in rear of the Confederate line. Filing to the right, through an orchard and open fields beyond, they came to a point where the dim outline of the troops engaged could be seen through the overhanging clouds of smoke. The reserve halted in a field between the two bent flanks—the two heels of the horseshoe.

CHAPTER XXV.

STORMING THE RIDGE.

Mark Maynard was standing holding Madge by the bridle, surveying the battlefield. He heard a gun fired from the crest of the ridge so important to both armies. He turned and saw the shell it sent whirl in a spiral, screeching above the heads of two officers, evidently of high rank, standing in a field near the center of the horseshoe. One of them, a large, massive man, he recognized as General Thomas. The other was the commander of the newly arrived division. As Maynard looked the latter rode away. He was going with orders to retake the ridge.

Maynard had not seen General Thomas for months. Indeed he had met him but a few times since the days when he was the general's favorite scout. Remembering his disgrace, he was about to go away, not caring, in his altered condition, to meet the man for whom of all the army he felt the greatest reverence. But the general turned before he could do so and looked in his direction.

It was too late to go away unobserved, and Maynard felt a desire to discover if there were not something, after all, in this great soldier so great that he could afford to give him a kind word. He walked toward the spot where the general stood.

"What are you doing here, my man?" said the commander of all there was left of the Army of the Cumberland sternly, seeing the begrimed Maynard in private's uniform and not recognizing him. "Why are you not with your regiment?"

"I have no regiment, general."

"Your troop, then?"

"I have no troop. I am not a soldier."

"Who are you?"

"Mark Malone."

The sternness on the general's face slightly relaxed. "Ah, Colonel Maynard. Pardon me. I did not recognize you."

"No, general. I was Colonel Maynard. I am now a private citizen. I would be glad to assume my old scouting name, Mark Malone."

"I heard of your—misfortune. I regretted it doubly, remembering your services when you were scouting."

"Yes, general. Then my services had some value. I was fitted for a scout—a spy. You thought I was fitted for something better and advanced me. I was vain enough to think you right. I did not know myself. As a spy I needed no conscience. I was not subservient to any principle. When as a brigade commander I was obliged to choose on higher ground, I failed in the choice. I have proved myself unworthy of your confidence. I have sunk to the level from which I started."

The general did not reply. He was watching the newly arrived division getting into position.

"You connived at the escape of a spy, I think?" he said presently.

"Worse. I assisted in that escape."

"A woman, was she not?"

"She was, general."

"H'm. It isn't a pleasant task to shoot a woman. Yet a soldier must do his duty."

Maynard did not reply.

"Colonel, there is going to be a weak spot there. I would like you to go and see that that gap is closed. My staff are all away, as you see, on some duty. Ah! Never mind. They are marching by the flank, I see. Now it's all right."

He was so intent upon the forming of the line that for a moment Maynard thought he had forgotten his presence.

"Who was this woman?" the general asked presently.

"You remember when I went to Chattanooga to bring you information of Bragg's movements to Kentucky I met a Confederate officer—a Captain Fitz Hugh—who twice gave me my life?"

"Yes, yes, I remember. They're standing well down there in the center and with so little ammunition. They'll get their new cartridges presently from those brought by the reserve division. The ammunition comes as opportunely as the men."

"They're making a good fight everywhere," observed Maynard.

"Let me see. You say you were called upon to shoot a woman. She was some relative to this Captain"—

"Now, Colonel Fitz Hugh. A sister."

"That made it pretty hard for you, colonel. But a soldier must do his duty."

"Have the Confederates possession of that ridge, general?"

"They have."

"And are our men going to retake it?"

"They're going to try."

Maynard swept his eye over the position.

"They must take it."

The general shot a quick glance at the degraded officer.

"You think it important?"

"The fate of this part of an army—it can't be called a whole one—depends upon it."

"You are right, colonel. We must take that ridge or before nightfall be flying over this field like the right and center, or, what is worse, be captured. This is not the first time I have observed that your eye is made for war."

Maynard had become so engrossed that he did not hear. He almost forgot his chief's presence.

"I haven't a command to lead up that hill, but I have arms to carry a musket. I'll go in the ranks where I've been since the fight began," and he started in the direction of the reserve.

"Stay, colonel," called the general.

Maynard turned and walked back to where the general was standing. He waited for him to speak further, but he did not. Minutes passed, while Maynard watched the absorbed commander, who in turn was watching the line forming below.

"Colonel Maynard," he said at last, "do you see that regiment down there? It seems to be short of officers. So far as I can judge from its movements, no one is in command. I shall have to make an infantryman of you, though you are of the cavalry. Go and lead that regiment in the attack about to be made on the ridge."

"But, general"—

"There is no time for buts, sir."

"I am a civilian, with no right to command."

"You are in the service till the finding of the court that condemned you has been approved." Then to an aid, who rode up at that moment: "Captain, go with Colonel Maynard and place him in command of that regiment," pointing. "And let there be no mistake. If the order is questioned, say that the exigencies of a critical moment demand that it be obeyed."

Maynard tried to speak the grateful words that rose to his lips, but either he could not or he saw that the general's eye had caught a new point of danger and was absorbed in it. Mounting Madge, he rode away with the staff officer.

There was wonder on the faces of the men who saw a new commander in the uniform of a private of cavalry put temporarily in place to lead them. For a moment a murmur ran along the line, but some one recognized him—one who knew his mettle—and word was passed, "It's the cavalryman, Colonel Maynard."

None cared at that critical moment for his recent trial so long as there was one at their head who could lead them in what they all saw must be a desperate effort.

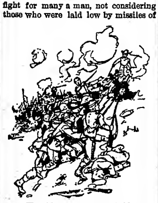
Amid the incessant thunders that burst everywhere around the line of that horseshoe curve of battle is one place where there is no firing. It is at the ridge, where men are forming at its base for a desperate attempt, and on its top others are preparing to receive them with lead enough to teach them the futility of so presumptuous a move.

All is ready. The line is formed. Seventy-five hundred men are about to push toward the realms of death, and a larger proportion of them are to enter there. At the word "Forward!" the skirmishers move out into the thicket that covers the side of the disputed ridge, followed by the regular battle line, all climbing the hill together.

Glance the eye along the line. There is the officer, his mind intent on keeping his men up to the trying work before them. The officer intent in keeping himself steady before the eyes of the line he leads. There are the faces in the ranks, most of them, if not all, stamped with a serious cast, a dread under control, with the thought of each that in a few minutes he may be lying, pierced by a bullet or maimed by a shell. A few there are whose remarkable physical nerve or in whom a natural excitable temperament gives them an appearance of exhilaration, but such are often the most depressed just before they are well in the fight.

While the line of blue climbs the side of the ridge all is quiet above—a quiet that brings a suspense harder to bear than a scattering fire. It promises a tempest when it comes. And it comes soon. From a concealed line near the top suddenly there is a myriad of explosions. Every missile known to war is sent down to stagger that blue line. The first crop of human flesh lies under the reaper.

There was pandemonium on that hillside for 40 minutes. It was an eventful fight for many a man, not considering those who were laid low by missiles of war. There were a few whose place it was to load in whom a constitutional inability rendered it impossible for them to face such a storm. They were ordered back, their places filled by those made of sterner stuff. There were soldiers in the ranks who skulked, but their officers drove them on. The main force of that reserve division of Union troops showed a united strength of purpose, which, if it could be transformed to a different field, a field of moral heroism, would make an army of gods.



The ridge was won and held.

Mark Maynard climbed with the rest. For a moment when that storm burst the instincts of a human being, acting upon him suddenly, made him recoil. A number of quick recollections flashed before him. His position, the chance given him to redeem the past, the consciousness that men looked to him for strength in that trying moment—they were all as nothing compared with one other, one which prevented any further giving back. It was not a desire for death. That was too near. It was not a desire to show prowess at a moment when men were either quailing or making records as heroes. At that terrible moment there came before him a picture so sweet, so innocent, that one may well wonder how it could have appeared amid such frightful scenes. It was the photograph of his wife and boy. With it flashed the thought: "All for them. For myself, nothing."

Whether he needed this to nerve him to do his duty, certain it is that from this moment he forgot danger. One idea absorbed his entire being—that whether he lived or died word should go back to those he loved better than himself that he was at least not among the flinchers. Once this idea possessed him he was a machine, a cog moving 800 wheels. He knew nothing of the deafening sounds; he was oblivious to bullets or shells. Like the picture of the Sistine Madonna was ever present the gentle face and figure of a woman holding up a child. Mother and child, in the famous painting, have for centuries stood forth, a divine light to lead the world from sin. Mother and child, in the eyes of Mark Maynard, were a divine light to lead him out of the depths into which he had fallen by a violation of principle.

The time of probation was short, but not too short for Maynard's bearing to have its effect. Among the few who held the men together during that brief struggle for the life of the army he took an important part. The ridge was won, and one of the first regiments on it was that commanded by Colonel Mark Maynard.

The ridge was not only won; it was held. But who can depict the holding? It was by a repetition of struggles like the one that took it, only the gray attacked, while the blue defended. Eight times the Confederates charged, and eight times they were driven back. Night came; there was no light whereby to make another. The ridge was in Union keeping; the Army of the Cumberland was saved.

Relinquishing his command, Maynard rode through 2,500 dead and wounded of the 7,500 men who climbed the hillside a few hours before to General Thomas' headquarters.

"Have you any further commands, general?" he asked.

"Ah, Colonel Maynard! Let me thank you among others for your work. You men over there have saved us. I want you to go back to the cavalry and command one of several forces intended to cover our retreat. We must get back tonight to a safer position."

"I await your orders, general."

"Colonel," added the general, turning upon him a kindly, approving eye, "there are a number to be rewarded for today's work, among them yourself. If we get safely out of this, I shall make a suitable acknowledgment of your services."

My Wife is Nervous

Says many a man and too often he is inclined to blame the poor, tired woman who cannot eat or sleep, whose whole life is filled with misery because her blood has become impoverished and her nervous system exhausted. She needs a building up medicine like Hood's Sarsaparilla. A few bottles will enrich and vitalize her blood, tone and strengthen her digestive organs, give her a good appetite, enable her to sleep soundly, banish her nervousness and bring back her smiles. Mr. J. W. Roberson, of Greenfield, Tenn., says: "My wife began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla about three months ago and she is now taking her third bottle. She has been in poor health for fifteen years. Hood's Sarsaparilla is doing her more good than any other medicine she has ever taken. Her appetite is better, she looks better and there has been improvement in every way."

THE rumor that Wilson S. Bissell, ex-postmaster general will be a candidate for governor of New York, has been confirmed. It is said that Bissell is quite put out on account of the publicity his plans have had. It seems he desired to be a candidate all unbeknownst to anybody, as it were—for a while at least, and he is all broke up to think that somebody gave the snap away.

THE early, dry spring, that enabled farmers to get their seeding done without hindrance of any kind, followed by the copious rains that fell on Saturday night is an augury of the very heaviest crops ever raised in the Valley, and more especially so as farmers have been unusually careful this spring to put in their crops well. Not only is this fact very encouraging but the prospect of a paying price for our wheat is more encouraging than it has been for several years past. Everything indicates the dawn of greater prosperity to our agricultural interests and hence to the entire business interests of the valley. As soon as grain-raising becomes more profitable the price of real estate will advance and everything else will follow.

Sketches of Wonderland, is a neat 108 page pamphlet issued by the Northern Pacific Railroad company, descriptive of the country through which the road runs. The chapter on Mt. Ranier is very instructive. Mr. Wheeler made the ascent on purpose to secure material for their pamphlet and it is evident that he did his work thoroughly. The chapter on the Yellowstone park is very interesting and contains many elegant illustrations of different scenes in the park. It is, indeed, a handsome little work well filled with valuable information of the far west country, also touching upon the Park Region of Minnesota and the Red River Valley. Anyone can secure a copy of this little book by addressing Chas. S. Fee, Passenger Agent, N. P. R. R., St. Paul, Minn., and sending six cents for postage.

The Buffington elevator, together with its contents, about 18,000 bushels of wheat and three empty cars, which lay on the track in position for loading, was entirely consumed by fire Saturday night. The particulars are as follows: At about 7:30 p. m. agent E. A. Fisk, after ascertaining that everything was all right, drove over to the Buffington farm about a mile distant, to get his mail. About two hours later Sam Crookshanks, who had come to the farm after a tank of water, noticed smoke proceeding from the top of the elevator. He ran to the house and notified Mr. Fisk, who in company with several farm hands, hurriedly drove to the burning building. When they arrived the large structure was ablaze from foundation to roof. By hard work the engine house, a brick structure about twenty feet east from the burning building was saved after the roof and window casings had been partially burned. The wind was an easterly one and aided the men in also saving several cords of wood which lay near the engine house. The origin of the fire is a mystery, as is that of a similar one which occurred at Buffington some years ago, in which an elevator belonging to the same firm, the Thorpe Elevator Co., was burned. The loss cannot be correctly estimated at present.

VETOED BY CLOUGH.

Six Bills Fail to Receive the Executive Signature.

ST. PAUL, April 28.—Governor Clough has vetoed six bills remaining on his hands from the legislative session which adjourned Tuesday. They are:

H. F. 9—The Johnson bill regulating peddlers. This bill is in conflict with the federal constitution.

H. F. 835—To prevent fraud in the manufacture and sale of cheese. Under this bill, as amended in the senate, it would have been possible for filled cheese to be sold in the state.

S. F. No. 31—To transfer the school text book fund to the internal improvement fund. The bill seeks by indirection to employ state money to aid in local improvements in the various counties, and is in conflict with article 9, section 5, of the constitution.

H. F. No. 510—To provide for the incorporation of a grand lodge of Junior Good Templars.

H. F. 600—To place the grain department of the state under civil service regulations. The bill discriminated, as between state departments, placing one under civil service and not all, and therefore was not deemed a wise measure by the governor.

H. F. 800—To repeal section 80, chapter 6, General Laws of 1878, relating to township assessors.

The second proposition is included in the report of the committee on course of study, and proposes the addition of another year to the present course of study.

The Mississippi River.

Somebody has gathered the following facts concerning the Mississippi river, which our readers may find interesting. An old spelling of the Indian name is "Michi Sepe," the "Great Father of the Waters." The true Mississippi begins at the junction of the Missouri and Upper Mississippi a few miles above St. Louis. There are five main tributaries: the Upper Mississippi, the Missouri, the Ohio, the Red, the Arkansas, the White, and the St. Francis. From the mouth of the Missouri to the Gulf is 1286 miles; from the head of the Upper Mississippi, 2616; from the head of the Missouri, 4194; from the head of the Ohio, 2551. The alluvial plain extends from the Delta to twenty miles above Cairo on the Ohio, and to Cape Girardeau, Mo., where are are the first rocky bluffs. The Upper Mississippi is clear; the Missouri, a muddy white; the Ohio, greenish; the Arkansas and Red, red ochreous. The amount of soil yearly carried into the Gulf by the river would cover a square mile to the depth 241 feet. For 1000 miles from New Orleans the average width of the river is 3000 feet. To enjoy the beautiful scenery of the Upper Mississippi, buy your ticket to Chicago or St. Louis over the Burlington, which runs for 300 miles along the east bank. WHAT will Grover do now? It is said that England has taken formal possession of Nicaragua in spite of Grover's feeble protest. If things keep on he may get a chance to hire another substitute.

This city should have a public park. The neglect to provide for this important feature in the early day when it should have been done should now be corrected before property gets booming again.

THE rumor that Wilson S. Bissell, ex-postmaster general will be a candidate for governor of New York, has been confirmed. It is said that Bissell is quite put out on account of the publicity his plans have had. It seems he desired to be a candidate all unbeknownst to anybody, as it were—for a while at least, and he is all broke up to think that somebody gave the snap away.

THE early, dry spring, that enabled farmers to get their seeding done without hindrance of any kind, followed by the copious rains that fell on Saturday night is an augury of the very heaviest crops ever raised in the Valley, and more especially so as farmers have been unusually careful this spring to put in their crops well. Not only is this fact very encouraging but the prospect of a paying price for our wheat is more encouraging than it has been for several years past. Everything indicates the dawn of greater prosperity to our agricultural interests and hence to the entire business interests of the valley. As soon as grain-raising becomes more profitable the price of real estate will advance and everything else will follow.

Sketches of Wonderland, is a neat 108 page pamphlet issued by the Northern Pacific Railroad company, descriptive of the country through which the road runs. The chapter on Mt. Ranier is very instructive. Mr. Wheeler made the ascent on purpose to secure material for their pamphlet and it is evident that he did his work thoroughly. The chapter on the Yellowstone park is very interesting and contains many elegant illustrations of different scenes in the park. It is, indeed, a handsome little work, well filled with valuable information of the far west country, also touching upon the Park Region of Minnesota and the Red River Valley. Anyone can secure a copy of this little book by addressing Chas. S. Fee, Passenger Agent, N. P. R. R., St. Paul, Minn., and sending six cents for postage.

The Buffington elevator, together with its contents, about 18,000 bushels of wheat and three empty cars, which lay on the track in position for loading, was entirely consumed by fire Saturday night. The particulars are as follows: At about 7:30 p. m. agent E. A. Fisk, after ascertaining that everything was all right, drove over to the Buffington farm about a mile distant, to get his mail. About two hours later Sam Crookshanks, who had come to the farm after a tank of water, noticed smoke proceeding from the top of the elevator. He ran to the house and notified Mr. Fisk, who in company with several farm hands, hurriedly drove to the burning building. When they arrived the large structure was ablaze from foundation to roof. By hard work the engine house, a brick structure about twenty feet east from the burning building was saved after the roof and window casings had been partially burned. The wind was an easterly one and aided the men in also saving several cords of wood which lay near the engine house. The origin of the fire is a mystery, as is that of a similar one which occurred at Buffington some years ago, in which an elevator belonging to the same firm, the Thorpe Elevator Co., was burned. The loss cannot be correctly estimated at present.

S. L. Collins, Crookston's leading liveryman, was up Monday.

The farmers are all rejoicing over the splendid growing weather. The wheat is up several inches and all indications are favorable for a large crop. The amount of grain sown in this locality this year, as compared with the amount sown last year, has been estimated as follows: Wheat, about 10 per cent. decrease; oats 10 per cent. increase; barley, 15 per cent. increase, and flax 40 per cent. increase.

W. H. Mathews, of Ada, manager of the Thorpe Elevator Co., was in town Tuesday, looking after interests at Buffington. A crew of men was set to work to clear up the wreckage of the burned elevator.

Mrs. C. A. Merril, of Duluth, arrived Tuesday, to spend a few days with her many friends here, who are glad to welcome her back to her old home.

VETOED BY CLOUGH.

Six Bills Fail to Receive the Executive Signature.

ST. PAUL, April 26.—Governor Clough has vetoed six bills remaining on his hands from the legislative session which adjourned Tuesday. They are:

H. F. 9—The Johnson bill regulating peddlers. This bill is in conflict with the federal constitution.

H. F. 835—To prevent fraud in the manufacture and sale of cheese. Under this bill, as amended in the senate, it would have been possible for filled cheese to be sold in the state.

S. F. No. 31—To transfer the school text book fund to the internal improvement fund. The bill seeks by indirection to employ state money to aid in local improvements in the various counties, and is in conflict with article 9, section 5, of the constitution.

H. F. No. 510—To provide for the incorporation of a grand lodge of Junior Good Templars.

H. F. 600—To place the grain department of the state under civil service regulations. The bill discriminated, as between state departments, placing one under civil service and not all, and therefore was not deemed a wise measure by the governor.

H. F. 800—To repeal section 80, chapter 6, General Laws of 1878, relating to township assessors.

The second proposition is included in the report of the committee on course of study, and proposes the addition of another year to the present course of study.

Geo. H. Walsh, who has been at Grand Forks a few weeks looking after his farming interests there returned to his new home at Fort Smith, Ark. one day last week. Robt. Stanton:—The early spring indicates a long season—a grand good thing for corn. If I was a farmer I should put in 40 or 50 acres of corn this year sure and I believe it would be a winner. Robert Stanton declares the Journal's advice to farmers who kill hogs in the summer time [illegible] out the danger of allowing the hogs to spoil from the animal heat, which he says is more dangerous than to let them hang in the sun all day. J. C. Coagdon came up from Brainerd on Friday to look after seeding operations on his big farm east of the city. He inveigled the JOURNAL man into taking a ride out there with him and we called at several farmhouses and saw many crops ere our return. We found that the early sown wheat is up and growing nicely, as well as some pieces of oats. Very little flax is sown as yet and it is quite early for that, for if a frost should catch it when first up it would cook it like buckwheat—result, no flax crop. J. C. secured some flax seed and will sow fifty acres of it.

O. H. Richardson told the JOURNAL man on Saturday that he had his wheat and oats all in—at least he had finished sowing them and if they had not all blown out they were still in. Says he could not endorse the idea of Hugh Thompson that "we did not really need rain till June 1st" for while his idea of the frost supplying moisture enough for the growing crops might be tenable, it's a fact that the top soil has been too dry and the seed liable to be blown out by the high prevailing winds. He is, however, of the opinion that the recent rains have helped matters wonderfully and is in hopes that we shall have a bouncing crop this fall.

Thos. Johnstone went up to Warren on Tuesday to get a team that on Saturday last he let to a man who said he represented the Grand Forks Herald and wanted to go a few miles north of Angus, would return same night. Veazie on the Herald's account as said Veazie was not in its employ. Mr. J. called to his aid Chief of Police Creamer who wired the authorities at Warren to lookout for the aforesaid Veazie. On Monday he received word that Veazie had been arrested and would be held subject to order so on Tuesday Mr. Johnstone went up there to see about it. He got the team all right.

T. A. HARRIS, Adj.

They Do Paint.

Accuse the average Crookston young lady of painting, and as a rule, she will deny the soft impeachment with emphasis—and we are not prepared to dispute, save in one instance only, wherein we have occular proof that at least one bright, young society lady of this city does paint—or did upon this occasion. During his rambles about the city on Saturday our reporter was surprised to see one of our leading bicyclists, of the male persuasion, sitting in the middle of the sidewalk on the bike and gazing intently at a little vine embowered cottage; even the bike was paralyzed and couldn't move. Glancing over against the house our reporter observed a bright young lady clad in neat morning robe and bright smiles industriously plying the paint brush at a rate that would seem to imply that there would be nothing left—of the house—to paint, in a little less than a York minute. The young lady had evidently just commenced operations—was standing on the ground and painting the dash-board up under the eaves—just as naturally as though she was a painter—or the son of a painter. At first we imagined that she was an artist—using the young man on the bike as a model, trying to transfer him to the house, as it were, but as she progressed with her work we observed that such was not the fact—she was only trying to paint the house. Just then Tom Young came along—the only living Tom Young now in captivity—and so cozy and charming was the picture presented that for the space of full half a minute Tom forgot to talk. He soon recovered his speech, however, and our reporter left him giving voluminous directions as to how the work ought to be done.

A Fatal Fire.

On Saturday night, of last week, the residence of Geo. Dennison, at Maple Lake, took fire and was entirely consumed, with its contents. Mr. and Mrs. Dennison had gone from home, leaving their children and the aged parents of Mr. Dennison to keep house. The fire was discovered about midnight and the aged couple who were sleeping up stairs were unable to escape. The bodies were almost entirely consumed. The old people were at one time residents of this city; he was blind and very feeble, which rendered it very difficult to rescue him, though the brave girls and the aged grandmother did all in their power to do so. The remains were recovered and were buried on Tuesday.

For Bella Coola.

On Friday morning there were gathered at the Great Northern depot, something less than 10,000 of our citizens to see the Bella Coola squad depart for their new home—about 500 miles beyond the jumping off place at Vancouver. There were 25 victims of misplaced confidence but every one seemed to be leaving a thousand friends or such a business here and every friend seemed to be right on deck to see 'em off. As a rule the genial conductor, Scott, is a mine of good humor but this crowd seemed to tax even his powers of endurance but at last he got 'em all safely stowed away somewhere—on the hurricane deck, on the cabin deck, in the companion hatchway, everywhere anywhere a colonist could be stowed away he was stowed, and soon the train went out into the cold world bearing these venturesome mortals to the untried future—whether of happiness or disappointment that future alone can reveal to them—But such is life.

The Enlarged Tannery.

The tannery company already finds it's quarters too small and have bought the large store building on Sampson's addition to add to the outfit. They bought the brick that came out of the old power house near the bridge, to use as a foundation for the new addition, which will be used as an office and for various other purposes. They propose to keep up with their growing business even though it should require every cent of the profits for a time.

Nice Stooling Weather.

The weather so far this week has been excellent for wheat to stool out nicely. Just cool and damp enough. If the wheat crop is not booming this year, it will be because the future developes more drouth than we have reason to anticipate.

Another Crookston Inventor.

Dr. J. H. Warninger has invented a device for throwing horses whenever a surgical operation is necessary and has applied for a patent therefor. The device is of such a nature as to cause the animal to lie down naturally and easily and there is no possible way by which he can sustain an injury. All who have seen this device pronounce its operations perfect in every essential particular.

Ben Clements opened his new confectionery and fruit store, just one door east of the post-office, in the McKinnon block, on Saturday evening, with a kisses candy pull. All the girls seemed to think Ben(s candy) "just too sweet for anything."

F. G. Brady, president of the city council of St. Paul, was in the city a or so last week. Mr. B. is a partner of Max. Ericson in the California Wine House. He is prominently mentioned for candidate for mayor in St. Paul at the next election.

Conducter Perry Runnels was over at Grand Forks this week. While there he saw a wagonload of hoboes come in to the police station looking like they had just come from a darkey wedding—all beautifully carved up. They had been indulging in a bit of a shindy in which knives played a star part.

B. F. Zamuche received a letter from A. F. Permain who is at Kalispel engaged on a house for a wealthy banker. Permain's family is at Spokane. He says that Kalispel is booming this summer; has 3000 inhabitants now, and prospects of doubling its population this summer.

Bob Lee, who has been so long with Fontaine & Anglim, has resigned his position there to accept a position with a large wholesale house in Fargo. Everybody regrets to see him leave the city but all will rejoice in the fact that he has secured so good a position. He has made many warm friends while here.

It begins to look like doing business when you see St. Paul cattle buyers up here looking for beef cattle—and that's what happened last week. Already cattle fit for beef are becoming quite scarce and if this thing keeps up much longer beef cattle will be gilt-edged property.

About eight o'clock on Saturday evening rain began to fall and continued copiously until about four o'clock Sunday morning. It was a warm rain, just what was needed for the growing grain and grass and gives token of big crops this fall. It only needed just this rain to insure that.

Geo. H. Walsh, who has been at Grand Forks a few weeks looking after his farming interests there returned to his new home at Fort Smith, Ark. one day last week. George thinks Arkansas a very healthy state, but he ought to see the east-side, along the Mississippi bottoms—his opinion would be likely to change.

Robt. Stanton:—The early spring indicates a long season—a grand good thing for corn. If I was a farmer I should put in 40 or 50 acres of corn this year sure and I believe it would be a winner. Corn is always good property and will be the most profitable crop a farmer could have this year. Corn and hogs would market well together next fall.

Stuart Chapin returned from Devils Lake Friday evening where he had been endeavoring to persuade the Devils-Lake residents to leave that lake which tasteth like brimstone and go to a country where there is no water except you import it in canals. Says it is a very easy thing to persuade them, the only drawback being a lack of means to go with.

Mrs. C. C. Knappen, wife of the editor of the Free Press at Detroit, Minn., died on Friday, of last week, after a painful illness of several weeks duration. Mr. Knappen was for a time the editor of the Fisher Bulletin in this county. We extend our earnest, heartfelt sympathy to our bereaved brother in an affliction than which this world holds none greater.

Robert Stanton desires the Journal to caution farmers who kill hogs in the summer time against the danger of allowing the hogs to spoil from the animal heat, which he says is more dangerous than to let them hang in the sun all day. The hog should be well opened up and if very large, should be split in two. Unless these precautions are taken an hour or two may spoil the meat of a hog killed in summer.

Prof. Helier was up from Fisher on Saturday to try and arrange for the Fisher band to come up on Memorial day. The Fisher band is one of the best in the country and should be engaged if it is decided to have a band on that occasion. The boys have been practicing appropriate music for the occasion and offer to come up for a very reasonable figure.

F. E. Hertz took a run out to Maple Lake on Saturday morning and Saturday evening little Freddy Durand was sitting on the city park fence sucking his thumbs, while he anxiously scanned the clouds in the horizon while he wondered if it was going to rain so he could not go out to the lake and play with Franky Hertz. He was advised to see Charlie Misuer about it and after he had done so went home and went to bed before curfew rung at 9 p. m.

Orrie McKay, a son of B. F. McKay, who formerly resided in this city was arrested here last week at the instance of a Grand Forks party who charged the young man with forgery. Orrie went back without making any fuss. He claims that the check was passed upon him and that he thought it good when he took it. He has had the reputation of being rather flip and has been in the reform school once.

J. C. Congdon came up from Brainerd on Friday to look after seeding operations on his big farm east of the city. He inveigled the JOURNAL man into taking a ride out there with him and we called at several farmhouses and saw many crops ere our return. We found that the early sown wheat is up and growing nicely, as well as some pieces of oats. Very little flax is sown as yet and it is quite early for that, for if a frost should catch it when first up it would cook it like buckwheat—result, no flax crop. J. C. secured some flax seed and will sow fifty acres of it.

O. H. Richardson told the JOURNAL man on Saturday that he had his wheat and oats all in—at least he had finished sowing them and if they had not all blown out they were still in. Says he could not endorse the idea of Hugh Thompson that "we did not really need rain till June 1st" for while his idea of the frost supplying moisture enough for the growing crops might be tenable, it's a fact that the top soil has been too dry and the seed liable to be blown out by the high prevailing winds. He is, however, of the opinion that the recent rains have helped matters wonderfully and is in hopes that we shall have a bouncing crop this fall.

Thos. Johnstone went up to Warren on Tuesday to get a team that on Saturday last he let to a man who said he represented the Grand Forks Herald and wanted to go a few miles north of Angus, would return same night. After he had gone Thomas began to get uneasy and finding a copy of the Herald he saw an announcement cautioning any person against trusting one A. Veazle on the Herald's account as said Veazle was not in its employ. Mr. J. called to his aid Chief of Police Creamer, who wired the authorities at Warren to lookout for the aforesaid Veazle. On Monday he received word that Veazle had been arrested and would be held subject to order so on Tuesday Mr. Johnstone went up there to see about it. He got the team all right.

Attention, Col. Cobham Post!

Everybody turn out at the regular meeting to-morrow night. Business of importance on hand. By order of commander.

They Do Paint.

Accuse the average Crookston young lady of painting, and as a rule, she will deny the soft impeachment with emphasis—and we are not prepared to dispute, save in one instance only, wherein we have occular proof that at least one bright, young society lady of this city does paint—or did upon this occasion. During his rambles about the city on Saturday our reporter was surprised to see one of our leading bicyclists, of the male persuasion, sitting in the middle of the sidewalk on the bike and gazing intently at a little vine embowered cottage; even the bike was paralyzed and couldn't move. Glancing over against the house our reporter observed a bright young lady clad in neat morning robe and bright smiles industriously plying the paint brush at a rate that would seem to imply that there would be nothing left—of the house—to paint, in a little less than a York minute. The young lady had evidently just commenced operations—was standing on the ground and painting the dashboard up under the eaves—just as naturally as though she was a painter—or the son of a painter. At first we imagined that she was an artist—using the young man on the bike as a model, trying to transfer him to the house, as it were, but as she progressed with her work we observed that such was not the fact—she was only trying to paint the house. Just then Tom Young came along—the only living Tom Young now in captivity—and so cozy and charming was the picture presented that for the space of full half a minute Tom forgot to talk. He soon recovered his speech, however, and our reporter left him giving voluminous directions as to how the work ought to be done.

A Fatal Fire.

On Saturday night, of last week, the residence of Geo. Dennison, at Maple Lake, took fire and was entirely consumed, with its contents. Mr. and Mrs. Dennison had gone from home, leaving their children and the aged parents of Mr. Dennison to keep house. The fire was discovered about midnight and the aged couple who were sleeping up stairs were unable to escape. The bodies were almost entirely consumed. The old people were at one time residents of this city; he was blind and very feeble, which rendered it very difficult to rescue him, though the brave girls and the aged grandmother did all in their power to do so. The remains were recovered and were buried on Tuesday.

For Bella Coola.

On Friday morning there were gathered at the Great Northern depot, something less than 10,000 of our citizens to see the Bella Coola squad depart for their new home—about 500 miles beyond the jumping off place at Vancouver. There were 25 victims of misplaced confidence but every one seemed to be leaving a thousand friends or such a business here and every friend seemed to be right on deck to see 'em off. As a rule the genial conductor, Scott, is a mine of good humor but this crowd seemed to tax even his powers of endurance but at last he got 'em all safely stowed away somewhere—on the hurricane deck, on the cabin deck, in the companion hatchway, everywhere' anywhere a colonist could be stowed away he was stowed. and soon the train went out into the cold world bearing these venturesome mortals to the untried future—whether of happiness or disappointment that future alone can reveal to them—But such is life.

The Enlarged Tannery.

The tannery company already finds it's quarters too small and have bought the large store building on Sampson's addition to add to the outfit. They bought the brick that came out of the old power house near the bridge, to use as a foundation for the new addition, which will be used as an office and for various other purposes. They propose to keep up with their growing business even though it should require every cent of the profits for a time.

Nice Stooling Weather.

The weather so far this week has been excellent for wheat to stool out nicely. Just cool and damp enough. If the wheat crop is not booming this year, it will be because the future developes more drouth than we have reason to anticipate.

Another Crookston Inventor.

Dr. J. H. Warninger has invented a device for throwing horses whenever a surgical operation is necessary and has applied for a patent therefor. The device is of such a nature as to cause the animal to lie down naturally and easily and there is no possible way by which he can sustain an injury. All who have seen this device pronounce its operations perfect in every essential particular.

LINCOLN'S APPARITION.

He Saw a Ghostly Image of Himself In a Looking Glass.

Mr. Noah Brooks, in his personal reminiscences of Lincoln in The Century, tells the following strange story:

On the day mentioned Lincoln narrated an incident the particulars of which I wrote out and printed directly after. These are his own words, as nearly as they could then be recalled:

"It was just after my election in 1860, when the news had been coming in thick and fast all day and there had been a great 'hurrah boys,' so that I was well tired out and went home to rest, throwing myself down on a lounge in my chamber. Opposite where I lay was a bureau with a swinging glass upon it" (and here he got up and placed furniture to illustrate the position), "and looking in that glass I saw myself reflected nearly at full length, but my face, I noticed, had two separate and distinct images, the tip of the nose of one being about three inches from the tip of the other. I was a little bothered, perhaps startled, and got up and looked in the glass, but the illusion vanished. On lying down again, I saw it a second time, plainer if possible than before, and then I noticed that one of the faces was a little paler—say five shades—than the other. I got up, and the thing melted away, and I went off, and in the excitement of the hour forgot all about it—nearly, but not quite, for the thing would once in awhile come up and give me a little pang as if something uncomfortable had happened.

"When I went home that night, I told my wife about it, and a few days afterward made the experiment again, when" (with a laugh) "sure enough the thing came again, but I never succeeded in bringing the ghost back after that, though I once tried very industriously to show it to my wife, who was somewhat worried about it. She thought it was a 'sign' that I was to be elected to a second term of office, and that the paleness of one of the faces was an omen that I should not see life through the last term."

This is a very remarkable story—a coincidence, we may say—to which some significance was given by the cruel death of the president soon after the beginning of his second term. I told Mrs. Lincoln the story and asked her if she remembered its details. She expressed surprise that Mr. Lincoln was willing to say anything about it, as he had up to that time refrained from mentioning the incident to anybody, and as she was firm in her belief that the optical illusion (which it certainly was) was a warning I never again referred to the subject to either the president or his wife.

Subsequently Lincoln's version of the story was confirmed by Private Secretary John Hay, who, however, was of the opinion that the illusion had been seen on the day of Lincoln's first nomination, and not, as I have said, on the day of his first election.

HE ARRIVED LATER.

Colonel John S. Wise Did Not Meet General Sherman In Brazil.

Everybody knows that Colonel Wise fought as a mere boy in the southern army, became a Republican after the war and ran an unsuccessful race for governor of Virginia. He has been on the field of honor more than once, but no longer believes in the duello as he did in his younger days. While a Virginian to the core still he is not a native of the Old Dominion. At that famous Astor House dinner a few years ago made memorable by the eulogy Mr. Depew passed on President Cleveland, General W. T. Sherman, in the course of a very interesting speech, alluded to a trip made by him to California in 1846, via the cape. He stopped off at Rio Janeiro on Christmas eve to pay his respects to Hon. Henry A. Wise, at that time United States minister to Brazil, and was hospitably entertained.

"What time did you leave the minister's house?" queried Colonel John S. Wise, who was one of the guests, interrupting General Sherman.

"At 9 o'clock, Christmas eve," responded old Tecumseh.

"If you had just waited two hours longer, general, I'd have been glad to make your acquaintance," said Wise.

Two hours later the young Wise made his first appearance on this terrestrial globe.—Washington Post.

Somber Christianity.

The Auld Licht kirk when Dr. Chalmers visited it was a terribly bare little building. The elders were a grim set. They kept their bonnets on their heads till the minister entered, and they had each a large stick in his hand, which they used for "chappin" their noses through all the service. The minister wore no gown or bands. He gave a very long sermon full of sound divinity, but without the smallest practical application and without a vestige of feeling. At length Dr. Chalmers got out, the dismal worship being ended, and his word was, "If these people ever get to heaven, they will live on the north side of it."—San Francisco Argonaut.

A Great Memory.

The Journal of Speculative Philosophy gives a remarkable instance of a farmer in Indiana who could remember what he had done on every day for 20 years. He was repeatedly tested by reference to the notes made on previous examinations, and never failed both to name the day of the week and to tell what occurred to him on that day. The words used in his narratives often varied, but he always had the events as he had mentioned them before.

A Dilemma.

Friend—Have you completed your novel?

Author—Not yet, I am sorry to say. I have made six couples happy for life, but I have still got an old general and a shoemaker's widow on my hands, and somehow they won't match.—Fliegende Blatter.

WITHOUT THE Non-pull-out
BOW (RING)

it is easy to steal or ring watches from the pocket. The thief gets the watch in one hand, the chain in the other and gives a short, quick jerk—the ring slips off the watch stem, and away goes the watch, leaving the victim only the chain.

This idea stopped that little game:

The bow has a groove on each end. A collar runs down inside the pendant (stem) and fits into the grooves, firmly locking the bow to the pendant, so that it cannot be pulled or twisted off.

was, on such charge, sentenced to pay a fine of one hundred dollars. The sentence was imposed despite his denial of the truth of the facts alleged in such affidavits and order, and without any witnesses being sworn or evidence taken, and without any opportunity for defense.

The defendant Russell on the same charge, after he had demurred to the sufficiency of such affidavit and order, and after his demurrer thereto was overruled, made and verified an answer, thereby putting in issue all the facts alleged in such affidavits and order. The judge immediately on reading such answer and without any other or further proceedings, and without any opportunity on the part of the defendant to make any defense, arbitrarily refused to hear any evidence on the part of the defendant, and imposed upon him a fine of $250, or to stand committed for six months in default of payment and a sentence of thirty days imprisonment in addition to such fine and imprisonment, and refused to stay proceedings thereon, or to admit defendant to bail; that on such sentence the commitment was issued, and the defendant Russell was thereunder imprisoned in the county jail of Polk county for ten days, at which time he was released by a writ from the supreme court. In this case it appears that a writ of habeas corpus had been issued by the judge, returnable before himself; that on a hearing under such writ the judge failed and refused to inquire into the facts, or the legality of the proceedings by which the defendant had been incarcerated, but remanded him back to the county jail.

That, as to the tenth, eleventh, twelfth, thirteenth and fourteenth specifications of the petition, in the main, the facts as alleged in the petition are found to be true. Much of the evidence, which the records did not disclose, had to be procured from unwilling witnesses, and it appears clear that the judge sought to exert an undue influence over the grand juries of the county of Polk, at the December, 1894, and January, 1895, terms; that his own language, as disclosed by the record, and by several witnesses, in discharging the first grand jury, in December, 1894, shows that he had obtained knowledge of the evidence before that grand jury, and of considerable of the proceedings which the law required to be kept secret, and that it was made, at least in a measure, public by the judge, and used by him for a purpose of coercing the special grand jury called by him thereafter and to procure indictments to be brought against certain public officers, named and designated by him to numerous persons. The desire and intention of the judge in these matters may have been good, but such flagrant violation of the law by a judge cannot be upheld on any grounds and are subversive of law and order, and contrary to the welfare of any community, and we can conceive of no circumstances under which they are justifiable. As to the jurors selected by the judge, and whose names were ordered by him to be put in the jury box to serve as petit jurors, the records show twelve or thirteen such jurors, so selected by the judge, and the evidence shows them to have been, in almost every case, partisans or political friends of the judge.

As to the fifteenth and sixteenth specifications of this petition, there is sufficient evidence to warrant a finding that they are true as alleged in the petition.

As to the seventeenth and eighteenth specifications of this petition, they are admitted to be true as alleged. The eighteenth is the writing and issuing a letter by the judge addressed to one Stephen Sprague, authorizing him to offer complete immunity and protection to all gamblers and keepers of houses of prostitution if they would appear and testify to any evasions of the law by the officers of East Grand Forks. There appears to be and can be no justification for the writing, issuing or making public such a letter. The seventeenth is nearly of the same character as the eighteenth. An offer of amnesty and protection to one Mabel Mabel, a person charged with being the keeper of a house of ill-fame, if she would come into court and testify against the city officers of East Grand Forks.

As to the nineteenth specification of this petition, it is true substantially as charged in the petition as to the manner of discharging the former grand jury in December, 1894, and the object of it, and the manner of calling a special grand jury, which met January 15, 1895. The records show the facts to be as alleged in the petition, and the evidence shows that two men, Brown and DeWolf, were, on what would appear to be insufficient grounds, excluded from that grand jury with the knowledge and consent of the judge, and two other persons, Wold and Finkey, were, without having been summoned, and without having been sworn, suffered and allowed to take part in the deliberations of that grand jury, in the place of the jurors so excluded. From the testimony of several witnesses it appears clear that the judge was seeking to obtain and did obtain knowledge of what evidence and what proceedings were taking place and introduced before both the two grand jurys above referred to.

As to the twentieth specification of this petition, the facts are as alleged in the petition.

As to the twenty-first specification of this petition, no evidence was submitted.

The naturalization records of Polk county show gross irregularity in the issuance of naturalization certificates. It appears from the records and numerous orders of the judge, that it was his practice to have persons go before him at his chambers at different times without the clerk being present, and there the judge issued orders directing the clerk in many cases to issue certificates of naturalization to various persons specified in such orders, and in some instances threatened the clerk of court with punishment for refusal to issue certificates of naturalization on such orders; and in other cases knowingly violated and disregarded the laws of the United States relating to naturalization.

Your committee find from the evidence and the conclusions stated that the said Frank Ives has arbitrarily and tyrannically exercised the powers of his office in disregard of the rights and liberties of citizens of the state of Minnesota, and contrary to its constitution and laws.

Your committee therefore recommend the adoption of the following resolution.

RESOLVED, That Frank Ives, judge of the district court of the state of Minnesota, in and for the Fourteenth Judicial District, be impeached for corrupt conduct in office, crimes and misdemeanors.

WILL NOT FORM ALLIANCES.

Attitude of the United States in the Eastern War Trouble.

WASHINGTON, April 30.—The attitude of the United States in the Eastern war trouble has been made clear to the various powers interested. In brief, it is that the unvarying policy of this country is not to form alliances which may involve it in complications with the countries of Europe or Asia. It is a reassertion of the policy of isolation, except in so far as this country may be able to exert a kindly or advisory influence toward the adjustment of trouble involving Eastern nations. The foregoing is now accepted by diplomats here as the policy which will guide the United States in the pending European complications over the China-Japan settlement.

FOR A NEW DOLLAR

A DETROIT REPUBLICAN ORGAN HAS A PANACEA

For All Our Financial Ills—Use Both Gold and Silver—One Metal Expected to Just Balance the Other in Fluctuation—Illinois Democrats Will Declare in Favor of Free Silver.

DETROIT, May 1.—The Tribune (Rep.) publishes an editorial leader which will declare in favor of the solution of the present money question by the issuance of a new dollar to be composed of proportional parts of gold and silver. The article quotes the national platforms of 1888 and 1892 in favor of bimetallism and points out the dangers of a practical silver monometallism through the throwing open of the mints to unlimited coinage. Continuing The Tribune advocates the composite dollar as a measure easiest to effect and with the least disturbance to business of any plan suggested. It proposes:

"That all existing coinage laws be repealed and that there be enacted a law creating a new American dollar, which should become the standard coin of the nation, this dollar to be composed of 206¼ grains of standard silver and 13 9-10 grains of standard gold, fused together and struck into a handsome coin about the size of the present half dollar.

"The coin would be of absolutely stable value, for in case of disparity at any time in the commercial value of silver, what was lost by the depreciation of one metal would be made up by the exactly corresponding appreciation of the other."

As to the question whether the proposed dollar would be suitable for export, The Tribune says: It would not be necessary to export the coin while uncoined gold could be secured which would be just as available. If at any time it became necessary to separate the gold from the silver it could be done at the United States mint at a cost of less than 1 per cent. This very cost would be a precaution against the export of coin while uncoined bullion was attainable.

ILLINOIS FOR SILVER.

Sensation Caused by Statements Made by Hon. John Mayo Palmer.

CHICAGO, April 29.—The most sensational political development for many a day in Chicago, if not in the entire West has been made public. The coming Democratic convention in Illinois, will, beyond all doubt, declare for free silver without international agreement of any kind, and the movement is of such strength that other Western and Southern States will be prevented with great difficulty, if at all, from following the lead of Illinois. As a party, the Democracy of Illinois is doomed to disorganization. The authority for these statements is Hon. John Mayo Palmer, corporation counsel of Chicago, and one of the best known Democrats in the state. He is not a free silver man. On the contrary he has a reputation with the more pronounced silver element as a decided "gold bug." Mr. Palmer is the son of United States Senator Palmer, who has been leading the money fight for the national administration in Illinois. The statements were made in an interview and the news caused Widespread Comment and Speculation.

Mr. Palmer returned to Chicago from the state capital. He said:

"The sentiment in favor of the free and unlimited coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1, without international conference or agreement, seems to have taken complete possession of the Democracy of Illinois outside of Cook county. I conferred with men of all shades of opinion upon this subject, Republicans as well as Democrats, I talked with Republicans, because some times the lookers-on see more of the game than the players. I met old friends with whom I could talk confidentially, and got the impression that while there is a very strong and respectable sentiment throughout the state in opposition to this currency theory, yet the opponents of 16 to 1, are without organization, apparently without any ambition to succeed, and are singularly silent, while the silver men are vigorous, active and aggressive.

FOR SOUND MONEY.

Iowa's Democratic State Committee Endorses the Platform of '92.

DES MOINES, April 27.—The Democratic state committee has decided on Aug. 7 for the state convention at Marshalltown. Nathan G. French was selected for temporary chairman.

A conference of prominent men in the party was held afterwards in which silver was discussed, resulting in the indorsement of the money plank in the Chicago platform of 1892, being a victory for the so-called sound money faction in the party.

ALLISON'S FINANCIAL VIEWS.

Said the Iowa Senator Is in Favor of Free Coinage at 16 to 1.

WASHINGTON, April 27.—Something of a sensation has been caused here by the announcement that Senator Allison of Iowa is for free silver coinage at 16 to 1. Congressman Hepburn claims to have a letter from Allison in which the senator declares himself freely for silver. Hepburn has been showing the letter around and it will be published in due time. There is now an active campaign going on in behalf of Allison.

Modjeska Expelled From Warsaw.

LONDON, April 25.—A dispatch to The Chronicle from Vienna says that the Russian government has expelled Mme. Modjeska, the well known actress, from Warsaw, owing to a violent speech she made against Russia in Chicago.

Thirteen Were Killed.

EDINBURGH, April 27.—An explosion occurred in a coal pit at Dsuny, near Stirling, about 80 miles from this place. There were 177 men in the pit at the time of the accident. Thirteen of them were killed.

Notice.

I am looking for work, washing, scrubbing, house-cleaning or a situation at house-keeping on a farm for a year or more. I am not afraid of work. I can show a good recommend in writing as to my character, and ability as a house-keeper. I am poor and have two children and any help given me in the city will be appreciated. Every body seems to be satisfied with my work, and I will be glad to find work.

She:—"Oh, Mr. B., I am so sorry! Indeed I did not anticipate this. I fear I can only be a sister"—

He:—"That's what I said. Be "assister" to me for life!" and he proceeded to embrace the opportunity without further remonstrance.

The Phœnix, Arizona, agents are filling the minds of all people who will listen to them with fairy tales of the great advantages of Arizona for a place of abode. The fact is that Arizona is an arid desert dependent wholly upon irrigation, which is rather unreliable, unsatisfactory and a very expensive luxury. It is the worst country in the United States for sand-storms, that at times become veritable blizzards, which are not only intensely disagreeable but positively dangerous at times. If a man is reasonably well fixed in this country he better stay, as, even if he could sell out here it would take all he could realize to get him there and a man should be well heeled to go to such a place. Should have enough to keep him a year or so while his new farm could be gotten into productive condition. These agents are giving only the best features and none of the drawbacks of the country and he who is fooled thereby is not wise. Better stay at home and grow up with the country.

Moral Courage in Daily Life.

"Moral Courage" was printed in large letters as the heading of the following items, and placed in a conspicuous place on the door of a systematic merchant in New York, for constant reference; and furnished by him for publication.

Have the courage to discharge a debt while you have the money in your pocket.

Have the courage to do without that you do not not need, however much your eyes may covet it.

Have the courage to speak to a friend in a shabby coat, even though you are in company with a rich one, and richly attired.

Have the courage to speak your mind when it is necessary for you to do so, and hold your tongue when it is prudent that you should do so.

Have the courage to tell a man why you will not lend him your money.

Have the courage to cut the most agreeable acquaintance you have, when you are convinced that he lacks principle—a friend should bear with a friend's infirmities but not with his vices.

Have the courage to show your respect for virtue in whatever guise it appears, and your contempt for dishonesty and duplicity, by whomso ever exhibited.

Have the courage to wear old clothes until you can pay for new ones.

Have the courage to acknowledge your ignorance, rather than seek knowledge under false pretenses.

MORTGAGE SALE.

(First Pub. May 2d, 1895.)

DEFAULT has been made in the conditions of a mortgage containing power of sale dated October 17th, 1889, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Polk County, Minnesota, October 22d. 1889, in book 42, of mortgages, page 118, whereby Carl Johnsen and Karl Johnsen, his wife, mortgageors, mortgaged to the Middlesex Banking Company, mortgagee, the East Half of the Northwest Quarter and East Half of the Southwest Quarter of Section Thirty-one (31) in Township One hundred and forty-eight (148), of Range Forty-three (43), in said Polk County, by which default the power of sale has become operative and no action or proceeding at law has been instituted to recover the debt remaining secured thereby, or any part thereof, and there is claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date hereof, $331 to which amount should be added the taxes on said property paid by said mortgagee, amounting with interest, as provided in said mortgage, to $12.60, making the total amount claimed to be due at the date hereof on said mortgage $343.85.

Now notice is hereby given that by virtue of said power, said mortgage will be foreclosed and said premises sold at public auction, by the sheriff of said county or his deputy, Saturday, June 15th 1895, at ten o'clock, A. M., at the front door of the Court House in Crookston in said county, to pay said debt, interest, attorney's fees and disbursements allowed by law.

Duluth News-Tribune:—The POLK COUNTY JOURNAL thinks that Walter S. Bissell retired from the post-office portfolio in order to become a receptive candidate for the presidency. What has become of our old friend Wilson S. Bissell?

Washable Materials for Ladies' Summer Gowns.

New grass linens and ecru linen batistes have color introduced in dashes, bars and stripes, or else they are quite plain. Heavier smooth linens come in a variety of shades, such as light blue, navy, pink, green, and yellowish brown. Among the new cotton fabrics are some beautiful Hindoo batistes and smoothed twilled teviot suitings. Ginghams, zephyrs and dimities are always popular, and appear in pretty and novel designs. Dotted Swiss muslins with artistic wreaths, boquets, or separate blossoms, printed in natural colors, on tinted or white grounds, easily take the lead for elegant wear. In the McDowell Fashion Magazine just at hand can be seen many illustrations of these new fabrics and their applications. The latest styles of skirts and capes appear in special coupon patterns. These popular and artistic patterns continue to form a most characteristic feature of the McDowell Journals, and are highly prized for their accuracy of details and their practical excellence. "La Mode de Paris" and "Paris Album of Fashion" cost only $3.50 a year, or 35 cents each per copy; "The French Dressmaker" is $3.00 per annum, or 30 cts. a copy; "LaMode" costs only $1.50 per year. or 15 cents a copy. If you are unable to procure either of these publications from your newsdealer do not take a substitute from him, but apply by mail to Messrs. A. McDowell & Co., 4 West 14th Street, New York.

GETS A SNUG SUM

Della Hershfield's Suit Against Her Rich Brother-in-Law Compromised.

PLAINTIFF TO GET $30 000.

Alienation of Her Husband's Affections the Ground for the Suit.

HELENA, Mon., May 8.—Della Hershfield, formerly cashier in a dry goods store, who married Aaron Hershfield, a rich banker, is to get the snug sum of $30,000 because he was enticed away from her. She is also to be rid of an unwilling and somewhat aged husband. Hershfield left his young wife two months after they returned from Chicago, where they were married in the fall of 1893. He went to Fargo, where he instituted suit to have the marriage declared void, alleging he was entrapped into it by threats and misrepresentations. The trial at Fargo last November resulted in a complete victory for the young wife. Meantime she had instituted suit against her husband's brother, Lewis Hershfield, and his wife, for damages in alienating the affections of her husband. She claimed $75,000 damages. The case, after being put off several times, was finally brought to trial Monday in the district court here.

Agreed on a Compromise.

Before a jury had been secured Senator Carter, ex-Senator Sanders and Judge McConnell, representing the defense, and Colonel C. B. Nolan, ex-Governor J. K. Toole and William Wallace, representing the plaintiff, had a consultation in which L. B. Hershfield took part. At its conclusion Senator Carter announced to the court that by consent the counsel would like to have the case continued two weeks and added there was little probability of its being tried.

The terms of the settlement are $30,000 and consent of Aaron Hershfield to divorce. His wife's suit for divorce will now be instituted. It will be allowed to go by default and the $30,000 agreed on will be settled on her as alimony.

BENEDICT ARRESTED.

Taylor's Brother-in-Law Now En Route to South Dakota.

CHICAGO, May 8.—The arrest of H. M. Benedict, brother-in-law of W. W. Taylor, the defaulting state treasurer of South Dakota, took place in Chicago at the Leland hotel. Pinkerton detectives say that it has been definitely learned that Benedict helped Taylor to escape. He has been wanted for some time and a constant search for him has been kept up. Last week it was learned that Benedict had been in this city but had gone to New York. A search of the latter place failed to find him, however. Then word was received that he was still in Chicago, and he was discovered at the Leland hotel. A man was sent to Springfield for requisition papers, and, as soon as he returned, Benedict was placed under arrest and immediatly taken aboard the train for South Dakota. The fact of the arrest was kept secret until after he was on the train.

REPORTED SHORT OVER $30,000.

City Treasurer Jacobs of Butte, Mon., Commits Suicide.

BUTTE, Mon., May 8.—Simon Jacobs, the retiring city treasurer, committed suicide by shooting himself through the head. The act was committed in an shafthouse a mile west of the city. Jacobs' term of office expired Monday, and he is reported short in his accounts $30,000 or $40,000, but there is no positive information regarding it. Jacobs has been city treasurer six years and was one of the best thought of young men in Butte and a man of most exemplary habits. The community is greatly shocked. If he is short in his accounts the money is believed to have been lost in mining or his private business.

COURTMARTIAL GOES.

Federal Supreme Court Reverses the Decision in the Sayre Case.

WASHINGTON, May 8.—The supreme court of the United States has rendered the decision in the case of David B. Sayre, involving the constitutionality of courtmartial law, appealed from the circuit court of Virginia, which had released Sayre on a writ of habeas corpus. It reversed the judgment of the court below.

That Maple Lake Fire.

After the first shock was over a rumor was put into circulation that the fire that caused the death of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Dennison, of Maple Lake, was of incendiary origin. The alleged circumstances were of such a nature that the county attorney considered an investigation entirely in order, so with Deputy Coroner Wyatt he went down to the lake and spent time enough to fully investigate the matter. After thorough investigation he could not find sufficient cause to arrest the person who had been suspected; consequently no arrests were made. As near as the facts can be got at, the fire originated either from the kitchen stove or lightning.

WAS A BAD CRASH.

Clarke Creditors May Not Get Over 50 Cents on the Dollar.

MINNEAPOLIS, May 7.—The rumored and indefinite charges against Fred H. Clarke, junior partner of the insolvent lumber firm of N. P. Clarke & Co., are more sensational than the creditors at first supposed. The creditors were not prepared for the discoveries made when the books were examined. In the past seven years Fred Clarke is said to have drawn from the firm's account no less a sum than $215,000 charged to personal expenses. He has made no exlpanation and has persistently refused to answer any questions, except to deny that he has been gambling in stocks. He has no personal assets, so far as known, except a life insurance policy for $150,000, which he has not mentioned to the creditors.

It will not be known for days, perhaps weeks, just what per cent of the liabilities the wrecked company will pay. It is not likely that more than 75 cents on the dollar will be realized, and perhaps a very little over 50 per cent can be gotten hold of by the the larger creditors.

DIED OF SMALLPOX.

Table Showing the Ravages of the Disease in This Country.

WASHINGTON, May 3.—A tabulated statement published by the marine hospital bureau gives the number of deaths from smallpox which occurred in each state or territory of the Union during the year 1894, as well as the number of cases. Deaths were:

Arizona 1, Arkansas 26, California 2, Connecticut 17, District of Columbia 6, Illinois 887, Indiana 10, Kansas 7, Kentucky 1, Louisiana 1, Maine 1, Massachusetts 3, Michigan 84, Minnesota 4, Missouri 2, New Jersey 12, New York, 337, Ohio 37, Pennsylvania 34, Rhode Island 3, Tennessee 1, Wisconsin 253.

In several states the disease has been more virulent since the beginning of the present year than it was before.

THE STATE LOSES.

South Dakota Not Entitled to a Part of the Yankton Reserve.

WASHINGTON, May 7.—Secretary Smith has decided that the state of South Dakota is not entitled to the 50,000 acres of valuable lands in the Yankton Sioux reservation which the state recently took steps to secure for its own use. The entire reservation comprises about 168,000 acres, and the 50,000 claimed by the state included some of the most valuable lands in South Dakota. The reserve was to have been opened for settlement within a few days, but final action was deferred pending the decision of the disputed question. It is now probable the president will promulgate the proclamation within a few days and the opening will take place three days afterward.

BENEDICT ARRESTED.

Taylor's Brother-in-Law Now En Route to South Dakota.

CHICAGO, May 7.—The arrest of H. M. Benedict, brother-in-law of W. W. Taylor, the defaulting state treasurer of South Dakota, took place in Chicago at the Leland hotel. Pinkerton detectives say that it has been definitely learned that Benedict helped Taylor to escape. He has been wanted for some time and a constant search for him has been kept up. To Arrest a Governor.

TOPEKA, Kan., May 8.—Governor Morrell is to be arrested on the charge of obtaining money under false pretenses. This is the statement of Waters & Waters, attorneys, who are preparing the papers which will be signed by Warden Chase of the state penitentiary. The charge is made that Governor Morrell drew money from the state to pay for services given by his present private secretary a month before the governor was inaugurated.

Policeman Has Hydrophobia.

FARIBAULT, Minn., May 8.—Policeman Louis Joachim lies at his home at the point of death from the effects of a dog bite received a month or more ago. Precautions were taken at the time, but last Friday he went home sick, and symptoms of hydrophobia developed that may prove fatal. A mad dog belonging to a man named Gilbelyou has bitten the son of Otto Stroberger, also a son of Daniel Donohue.

Drank Too Much Alcohol.

CHICAGO, May 8.—Three men employed at the Illinois Central shops at Burnside have died within the last few days of the result of free drinking of alcohol. The men were engaged to handle the alcohol sent out over the road, and, while pursuing their avocation, drank the raw spirit surreptitiously in large quantities.

THE WARSHIPS SAIL

BRITISH EVACUATE THE PORT OF CORINTO

And Nicaragua Will Satisfy the Demands of Great Britain—Central American States Said to Be Combining Against English Products.

MANAGUA, May 7.—The Nicaraguan government, having through the Salvadorian minister at London, accepted the modified ultimatum of the British government, the dispute between the two countries is practically at an end. Orders were cabled from London to Rear Admiral Stephenson, commanding the British squadron at Corinto, directing him to evacuate the port Sunday, and shortly after the flag denoting that religious services were in progress on board the warships was hauled down, the marines, who had been drawn up in front of the custom house, were ordered to return to their ships, and a few minutes later

The British Flag Was Hauled Down

from the government building and soon the soil of Nicaragua was free of the British invaders, and the long strokes of the sailers were sweeping the heavy boats to the warships lying in the harbor. Hundreds of persons assembled along the shore to see the embarkation of the marines, and a cheer went up as the noses of the boats headed harborward.

The warships were soon riding at short cables, but their departure was delayed by the tide until afternoon. It was expected that the flagship would depart with the other two vessels of the fleet, but when the water was high enough on the bar to permit the passage of the vessels, only the Wild Swan and the Satelite got under way. The flagship, the Royal Arthur, paid out her cable again, and this fact was believed to confirm a report that she would salute the Nicaraguan flag when the government repossessed itself of the port.

Combining Against Great Britain.

Great Britain has successfully played the role of a hawk and the flurry caused by her actions shows no sign of subsidence. The governments of, all the Central American states and those of several of the South American countries have telegraphed to President Zelaya suggesting the formation of a commercial union against the productions of Great Britain, and also against the transportation of Central and South American products in British bottoms. If such a union could be definitely arranged and the terms be put into force quite a severe blow would be dealt to British trade, and eventually the British government would find that its treatment of Nicaragua had cost it a sum of money far in excess of the smart money that she demanded from Nicaragua.

WILL FIGHT ZELAYA

End of the British-Nicaraguan Matter Speedily Followed by Revolution.

NEW YORK, May 7.—A special cablegram to The World from Tegucigalpa, Honduras, says:

Fighting has begun in Grenada, Nicaragua. Disorder is reported from Leon, also. Word comes from there that the followers of Ortiz, Zerulla and McHerro have united to make war on Zelaya. The Honduran troops concentrated at Cape Gracias will remain there, as it is feared that the threatened outbreak on the Mosquito reservation may extend here. The troops at Amalpa may be distributed along the coast. General Bonilla will take 4,000 men and go to President Zelaya's aid if requested.

Dr. Guzman, the Nicaraguan minister at Washington, had not been advised up to 2 o'clock of the reported revolution in Nicaragua.

A Tin Wedding.

Just about the time conducter Reed got ready to go to bed on Saturday evening he answered a ring at the door and was surprised to see a crowd of ladies and gentlemen, all armed with a tin-horn or so making night hideous with their "music." At first he thought it was a raid of "tin-horn gambler" or such a business and leaned up against the door-post for support, but just then the crowd began to offer congratulations when it dawned upon his mind that it was the anniverseary of his wedding-day——and the event known as the "tin wedding" So he invited the crowd into the house where they soon made themselves perfectly at home and when they left at a late hour they left a lot of tin things as a pleasant rembrance of the occasion. All who were there unite in pronouncing the affair a decided success.

AN IOWA CYCLONE

TERRIBLE STORM IN THE NORTHWESTERN PART OF THE STATE.

Early Estimates Placed the Loss of Life at Fifty, But Later Returns Reduce It to the Neighborhood of a Dozen—Five Killed at St. Charles, Ills.

SIOUX CITY, Ia., May 4.—At least 50 people are believed to have been killed in the terrible cyclone that passed over this part of Iowa. No one yet can tell how great the loss of life is, or how extensive the damage until reports from the outlying districts have been received. The telegraph wires in this section are all down and authentic information is hard to get. Three school houses are known to have been demolished, two teachers and several pupils and nearly a score of others killed and many buildings have been wrecked.

DEATH LIST REDUCED.

Fatalities From the Iowa Storm Less Numerous Than at First Supposed.

SIOUX CITY, Ia., May 8.—Order is coming out of chaos in the narrow district of Sioux county, which was swept by the tornado on Friday afternoon. Prompt aid has made the survivors of the devastated country as comfortable as possible. Nearly all the dead are now buried, and none of the injured now living are thought to be fatally hurt. The Journal's staff representative, who went all over the ground swept by the storm, says $10,000 will cover the property damage, including houses, barns, outbuildings and fences. In few places are the crops seriously damaged, for grain cannot be up far enough to be killed or lodged by the wind, and the principal injury in the fields was by the plastering of mud which they received. This "mud shower" was a prominent part of but it seems that the power of the wind simply scooped up the black, wet earth from the surface in several places and distributed it over other fields. The correct list of dead numbers 10. None have died since Saturday. About 20 persons were injured in Sioux county.

The mayor of Sioux Center appealed to Sioux City for aid and a public meeting was held and arrangements made for sending clothing and money. Officials of Sioux county, however, say it is not needed; that all have been properly cared for and the people of the neighborhood are well able to do it. In the whole of the territory covered by the tornado but three farmers were renters. All the rest were well-to-do and some are wealthy.

FIVE KILLED AT ST. CHARLES.

High Wind Blows Down a Building, Causing Death and Destruction.

ST. CHARLES, Ills., May 8.—During a heavy windstorm one of the walls of the Lungreen & Wilson building was blown down, causing the death of at least five persons, and it is feared others may be discovered in the ruins when the search is undertaken. Three persons were also badly injured, one of whom may die. The dead are: Miss Viola Anderson, dressmaker; Mrs. Hattie Church, milliner; Luke Causton, Charles Johnson, Joseph Thompson.

BLOODLESS WAR.

Breeds at St. Johns Surrender to the Marshal Peaceably.

ROLLA, N. D., May 7.—Marshal Cronan and posse have left for home, all arrests having been made. Chief Red Thunder was examined before the United States commissioner, charged with armed conspiracy, and was committed for trial. He has been taken to the Devils Lake jail. The other prisoners are in jail here.

Chief Little Shell was kept at Marshal Schindler's house during the night. The marshal had promised the Indians at the agency when the arrest was made that Little Shell would not be placed in jail, as a crowd of about 200 had threatened to resist his arrest. The breeds appear cowed and their organization is apparently broken up.

Important Changes.

The east-bound train on the Great Northern will change its time beginning May 5th, the train from Grand Forks leaving here at 8:30 p. m. and reaching Minneapolis at 6:45 and St. Paul at 7:15 a. m. Sleeping berth reservation can be made at any hour of the day at the depot or by telephone. The regular meal service in the dining car has been changed to the a la carte plan, passengers paying for just what they order. The time between St. Paul and Seattle has been shortened that it will make the run four hours quicker than any other route. The west-bound train will pass through at 5,40 a. m; 20 minutes earlier than before, while the east bound train in the evening is 10 minutes later.

THE INCOME TAX CASES.

Hearing Began Before a Full Bench of the Supreme Court.

WASHINGTON, May 7.—The supreme court, with its full membership of nine justices on the bench for the first time in many months, began the hearing of the income tax suits. Justice Howell Jackson of Tennessee, who has been absent from Washington the greater part of the past year seeking restoration to his health, took his seat again. Justice Jackson did not appear to be feeble, but it was plainly evident that he was far from being a well man. But two arguments are to be made for each side, by Attorney General Olney and Assistant Attorney General Whitney for the government and by W. D. Guthrie and Joseph Choate for the appellants, Messrs. Hyde and Pollock.

Believes the Conference Will Be Held.

WASHINGTON, May 7.—Senator Jones of Arkansas is among those who believe that an international monetary conference will be held during the present year to consider the relationship of silver to gold as a money metal. He is one of the members on the part of the senate who will attend the conference in case one is called.

May Settle the School Question.

WINNIPEG, May 7.—It is reported that a compromise on the Manitoba school question may be effected before the meeting of the legislature on Thursday. Premier Greenway had a conference during the morning with Lieutenant Governor Schultz on the matter. It lasted over three hours.

Grant, Parker and Roosevelt Sworn.

WASHINGTON, May 7.—Theodore Roosevelt, Colonel Fred D. Grant and A. D. Parker were sworn in as police commissioners to succeed Messrs. Martin, Kerwin and Murray.

There will be also, a commodious kitchen and dining room, while over the kitchen is a room about 16x20 that will be fitted up for a club room for the old boys, in which will be found all of the leading daily papers of the state, together with other papers and magazines and other facilities for instruction and amusement. It is the intention to get the postroom, at least, ready for occupancy as soon as June 1st, if possible.

MINORITY REPORT.

Of the Judiciary Committee Relative to the Impeachment of

Frank Ives, Judge of the Fourteenth Judicial District.

TO THE HONORABLE, THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE STATE OF MINNESOTA:

MR. SPEAKER AND GENTLEMEN:

A minority of the Judiciary Committee, being unable to fully concur in the report of the committee in relation to the matters referred to said committee, by a resolution of the House of Representatives, which resolution directed an investigation into the official conduct of Frank Ives, judge of the Fourteenth Judicial District of this state, beg leave to submit for your consideration, the following report:

1st. That, as to specifications numbered one, two, three, five, six, seven, fifteen, sixteen, twenty and twenty-one, we fully agree with the majority report: That neither said charges nor the evidence taken in respect to the same, or either of them, if true, would warrant the Legislature in further investigating the same, and that they are not of sufficient gravity, and do not constitute criminal or corrupt conduct in office, of the character to warrant proceedings of impeachment.

2d. That as to specification number four in said charges, we cannot agree with the majority, and do not find same to be true in the sense that it constitutes a criminal offence, or corrupt conduct in office, of sufficient importance to warrant the House of Representatives in preferring charges of impeachment against him. While we admit, that the conduct of Judge Ives in several cases against Herriager and others was not, perhaps, in strict conformity to law, yet the evidence shows that the defendants pleaded guilty of the crimes for which they were indicted; that Norman county had no jail in which to lodge its prisoners; that the defendant had previously been convicted under municipal law and by municipal authority, for the same offences; also that the County Attorney, as also the defendants' attorney and others joined in a request to the court, that the defendants pay a fine and be released, which course we believe to have been the practice more or less in different courts of the state at the time. Therefore, we cannot concur in the majority report or come to the conclusion that Judge Ives intentionally committed any crime, or is guilty of such corrupt conduct in office, will warrant proceedings of impeachment.

3d. As to the eighth specification, which charges that said Frank Ives made in open court certain statements regarding one Mr. Montague an attorney practicing in his court, we are of the opinion that neither the charges specified nor the evidence shows any crime whatever to have been committed, nor do we believe that the statements, if made, show such corrupt conduct in office as will warrant impeachment proceedings; for it should be remembered that a court has such powers over its officers as will insure order and decorum in its proceedings, and if any wrong was done to said Montague, the law will afford to him a civil remedy,

4th. As to the ninth specification we cannot concur in the conclusions arrived at by the majority, yet we admit that the arrest of Russell, Quigley, and Dwyer, for contempt, was rather an unusual proceeding in courts.

The majority of your committee seem to think that the essential part of the proofs in this case rests in the records in this case, while we of the minority wholly differ in this particular. The records only disclose the proceedings, and so far as they are concerned, give no clue as to the motion of Judge Ives, nor do such records disclose any of the surrounding circumstances in which the judge was then placed.

The evidence of witnesses further discloses the following circumstances:

That the court was then in session at Crookston, and had been for some days. That the regular panel of the grand jury had reported that they had finished their labors and were discharged. That at East Grand Forks, in said county, there was, and had been for some time prior thereto, a continuous and notorious open violation of the laws. That

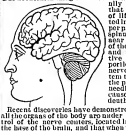
MYSTERIES!

The Nervous System the Seat of Life and Mind. Recent Wonderful Discoveries.

No mystery has ever compared with that of human life. It has been the leading subject of professional research and study in all ages. But notwithstanding this fact it is not generally known that the seat of life is located in the upper part of the spinal cord, near the base of the brain, and so sensitive is this portion of the nervous system that even the prick of a needle will cause instant death.



Recent discoveries have demonstrated that all the organs of the body are under the control of the nerve centers, located in or near the base of the brain, and that when these are deranged the organs which they supply with nerve fluid are also deranged. When it is remembered that a serious injury to the spinal cord will cause paralysis of the body below the injured point, because the nerve force is prevented by the injury from reaching the paralyzed portion, it will be understood how the derangement of the nerve centers will cause the derangement of the various organs which they supply with nerve force.

Two-thirds of chronic diseases are due to the imperfect action of the nerve centers at the base of the brain, not from a derangement primarily originating in the organ itself. The great mistake of physicians in treating these diseases is that they treat the organ rather than the nerve centers which are the cause of the trouble.

Dr. Franklin Miles, the celebrated specialist, has profoundly studied this subject for over 20 years, and has made many important discoveries in connection with it, chief among them being the facts contained in the above statement, and that the ordinary methods of treatment are wrong. All headache, dizziness, dullness, confusion, pressure, blues, mania, melancholy, insanity, epilepsy, St. Vitus dance, etc., are nervous diseases no matter how caused. The wonderful success of Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine is due to the fact that it is based on the foregoing principle.

Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or sent direct by Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid. It contains neither opiates nor dangerous drugs.

CHAPTER XXVI.

AN IMPORTANT LETTER.

The battle of Chickamauga is over. The Army of the Cumberland has withdrawn to Chattanooga, safe for the present at least behind breastworks. Their enemies are looking down upon them from the heights that encircle the town, awaiting for them to fall an easy prey through starvation. Colonel Maynard is awaiting the result of army red tape in the matter of his court martial. The papers in the case were lost in the roat of the right and were forgotten in his efforts to save the left. At any rate, no one seemed to care anything about them. The ups and downs in military life are rapid, and since the eclat attending his gallant services on the ridge his comrades were disposed to look upon his sacrifice of himself for another as rather a heroic act, after all, quite in accord with his peculiar personality.

One day—it was perhaps a week after the retreat of the Army of the Cumberland—Maynard was sitting in his tent with Jakey and the girl found on the battlefield. Jakey had turned up in due time and renewed his services with the deposed colonel. True, that colonel's position was somewhat anomalous. He was in no great need of an orderly, but was disposed to avail himself of Jakey's friendship. He had neither seen nor communicated with his wife, feeling a disinclination to do so until something definite should occur to establish his future status with the army. Jakey therefore continued to be the only friend "present for duty."

"You say," said Maynard to Jakey on the occasion mentioned, "that you left her at the house to which I told you to take her and took a hand in the fight."

"Reckon."

"Where did you get anything to fight with?"

"Dead sojer. Tuk his gun 'n cartridges."

"Upon my word! I wonder the enemy stood against such a re-enforcement."

"Waal, I shot one of 'em anyway. We was tuk by lots more 'n we uns 'n was runnin. Suddent I hearn a man say, 'Stop, thar, y' little Yankee rascal!' I turned roun 'n sor a ossifer on horseback. He called on me fo' ter surrender, 'n I up 'n shot him."

"You don't mean it?"

"Reckon."

"Then what did you do?"

"Waal, t'other uns, they went on, 'n I skedaddled."

"Well?"

"Then I went back to th' house 'n found Jennie, 'n by thet time 't was gittin dark, 'n the army commenced ter retreat. We uns retreated with th' rest on 'em."

"On foot?"

"Yas, part o' the way. Jennie she got tired, so we sat down by ther road till some cavalry (Jakey had learned not to call them critter companies) came along after the infantry hed all passed. One on 'em said, 'Ef thet bain't Colonel Maynard's orderly.' 'N with a little gal,' said another. Then th' fust on 'em tuk me on behind him 'n t'other un tuk Jennie on before him, 'n we uns all covered th' retreat."

"A valuable acquisition to the rear guard," observed Maynard, and he began to question the little girl. He discovered that she was the daughter of a farmer living on the battlefield who had neglected to remove his family till the last minute. Caught in the midst of a fight, all became panic stricken, and the child was separated from the rest.

While he was gaining this information an orderly came to his tent and showed him a letter postmarked County Cavan, Ireland, and addressed to the man who had assisted in the escape of Caroline Fitz Hugh. But there were features of the address which led Maynard to doubt if it was not for some other Ratigan.

"Where did you get this?" he asked.

"It came in with the mail. It's been lying unclaimed for several days, as no one knows who it is for. There was a Ratigan in the —th cavalry, but he is among the missing. The letter was taken to the headquarters of that regiment, and Colonel Burke suggested that you might know something about the man."

"Ah, yes!" said Maynard sadly. "You can tell Colonel Burke that I saw Ratigan killed. But this reminds me," he added. "I must see if I can regain his body." Then to the orderly: "I wish you would say to Major Burke that if he will give me an escort I'll go out under flag of truce and see if I can find out anything about Corporal Ratigan, whom I saw fall from his horse in the enemy's lines. Ask him to make out a request for permission to send out the flag, forward it and let me know the result."

The result was a permission to send out "the flag," and the next morning, after an early breakfast, Colonel Maynard, accompanied by Jakey and the little girl, whom Maynard hoped to restore to her parents, each mounted and all attended by a lieutenant and 20 men, set out from Chattanooga toward Mission Ridge. They met the enemy's pickets at the base of the ridge and were conducted to Rossville. Colonel Maynard at once requested that he might be accorded an interview with Colonel Fitz Hugh, if that officer survived the battle. A messenger was sent to summon him, and as he had some miles to go "the flag" party dismounted, were taken into a house, where they awaited the officer's arrival. Every attention was shown them, and they were made as comfortable as possible. Two hours after the departure of the courier Colonel Fitz Hugh rode up to the door.

There was always a certain embarrassment between these two men, which under the circumstances was quite natural, but which was heightened by the habitual dignity with which Fitz Hugh bore himself. There was much to force them apart and much to draw them together, but it all resulted in constraint. Fitz Hugh lifted his hat to Maynard, then advanced and put out his hand. Neither seemed to think of appropriate words of greeting, and there were a few moments of silence, which were broken by Maynard referring to his mission.

"Colonel," he said, "I am the bearer of a letter for Corporal Ratigan, though the superscription gives a different title than corporal—the man who assisted me on the mission which you doubtless well remember. I saw Ratigan fall from his horse and suppose that he is dead. Am I right?"

"No, sir. Corporal Ratigan lives. He was severely wounded by a shot from your men. He managed to keep his saddle till his work was accomplished, when he fainted through loss of blood. For a time his life hung in the balance. We now hope for his recovery."

"I am rejoiced to hear it. Perhaps this letter is for him. Will you attend to its delivery?"

"If you will ride with me to Ringold, where he lies, you can deliver it in person."

"That would indeed be a pleasure. Can you get permission to take me so far within your lines?"

"I can try."

"In that case I may look, by the way, for the home of this little girl. I rescued her from the battlefield, where she was lost."

A request was sent up to headquarters for permission to take Colonel Maynard and two children to Ringold and to visit the recent field of battle by the way. While the party were waiting for a reply Maynard was introduced to a number of Confederate officers, and the story getting round that he had saved the life of a Confederate emissary, the sister of Colonel Fitz Hugh, he soon found himself an object of interest. There was little disposition to inquire into the right or wrong of his act. The service was quite sufficient, and the deposed colonel was as highly honored among the Confederates as he had been condemned by his comrades.

Permission came for Colonel Fitz Hugh to take the party forward, leaving the escort at Rossville and taking Colonel Maynard's parole not to divulge anything he might see to the Union commanders, a useless provision, for there was nothing of importance by the way for him to see.

It was a singular party that crisp October morning, cantering down the Chattanooga and Lafayette road, the recent bone of contention, toward the now deserted battlefield. Maynard and Fitz Hugh rode together at the front. Then came Jakey and Jennie, both mounted like the rest, while a troop of Confederate cavalry formed the escort. The two colonels talked on everything except what was uppermost in their minds. Fitz Hugh several times attempted to guide the conversation upon Maynard's service to his sister in order that he might make a proper acknowledgment, but Maynard, foreseeing his intention, always made some remark by way of thwarting him.

"There are the heights from which you shelled the reserve marching to our relief," said Maynard, glancing to the left.

"And here our men found themselves near this coveted road, over which we are passing, when the fog lifted on Sunday morning," replied the other.

"Now we come to the horseshoe ridge. Let us ride around its base. From what the little girl has told me I fancy she lives on the road leading to Reed's bridge."

"My pop lives down thar," said the child, pointing to a cabin a mile below them.

Leaving the Chattanooga road, they followed another leading around the ridge, soon striking a third leading to Reed's bridge. When they came to the house pointed out by Jennie, a man was sitting on the fence, or one section of it which happened not to have been taken for firewood like the rest, whittling a stick. Catching sight of the child as the party rode up, he went to her, and taking her in his arms covered her with kisses. The mother, hearing the exclamations, rushed out and repeated the father's caresses.

The parents expressed as well as they were able and in their humble way their thanks to the rescuer of their child, and the party proceeded on their way.

"Goodby, Jennie," said her friend Jakey as he rode off.

"Goodby."

"Ef ye'll write me a letter, I'll make y' a doll outen a corncob. I know how ter make 'em."

"I can't write."

"Waal, I'll do it anyhow. Yer a purty nice young un ef y' air only a gal."

Riding over Reed's bridge, the party passed through the gap in the ridge beyond, and descending the east slope soon struck a road leading to Ringold. They rode into the town about noon and soon drew rein before the house where Corporal Ratigan lay wounded. Fitz Hugh and Maynard dismounted and entered together, Jakey bringing up the rear. In the hallway, her eyes large with astonishment at seeing her brother in company with Colonel Maynard, stood Caroline Fitz Hugh.

If the brother had failed in expressing his thanks to Maynard, the sister succeeded, but not by words. She grasped Maynard's hand, when suddenly, for the first time since her escape, a full realizing sense of the terrible end she had so narrowly escaped swept over her. She was looking her gratitude, with all the intensity of her expressive eyes, when her formal brother said:

"Caroline, Colonel Maynard suffered disgrace on your account. It is proper you should know how much we owe him."

This information was too much for even the strong nature of so resolute a woman. She burst into a passionate flood of tears.

"For the first time since it occurred," said Maynard gently, "I am satisfied with my act. What is the opinion of men to me beside the consciousness of having served so admirable a woman?"

Fitz Hugh threw open a door near by and led the way through it into a room where Corporal Ratigan, his ruddy locks contrasting with his pale face and the whiteness of his pillow, looked at them with the same astonishment as Miss Fitz Hugh.

"Why, colonel," he exclaimed, "are ye a prisoner?"

"No. I came by the courtesy of Colonel Fitz Hugh to deliver this letter, which I think is for you. Are you Hugh Ratigan?"

"Oi am."

"Sir Hugh Ratigan?"

"No; me father was Sir Thomas Ratigan of County Cavan, Ireland."

"Perhaps there have been changes," and Maynard handed him the letter.

The corporal took it and looked first at the black seal and then at the handwriting, which he recognized at once as his mother's, and read, "To Sir Hugh Ratigan, United States Army, Tennessee, U. S. A."

"Me brother is dead," he said solemnly and then tore open the envelope.

The letter advised him, as he supposed, of the death of his elder brother, and as the title and estates of the family descended to him he was adjured to go home and attend to his affairs.

"Is it as we supposed?" asked Maynard.

"It is. Oi'm Sir Hugh true enough. Me brother, God rest 'im, is gone."

"We sympathize with you at your brother's death and rejoice with you at your own inheritance," said Fitz Hugh.

All in turn took the corporal by the hand.

"You must go home at once," said Maynard.

"How will Oi go home when Oi'm enlisted for three years or durin the war?"

"We'll have to get you out of that," said Maynard. "Your duties are more important in Ireland than as a corporal in our service. We have more than a plenty of men."

"I wish we could say the same," observed Colonel Fitz Hugh.

The visiting party, expecting to return that afternoon, had but little time to converse upon anything except Sir Hugh Ratigan's future, and this they considered fully. It was arranged that as soon as the baronet should be able to travel he was to go through the lines, apply for a discharge and go to Ireland. Colonel Fitz Hugh anticipated no difficulty in securing his permission to depart from the Confederacy, and as he was a British subject of rank it was not expected that he would be held to a strict accountability for the part he had taken in the escape of Caroline Fitz Hugh, especially as that act had been largely lost sight of in an event of greater moment—the battle of Chickamauga. These matters once settled, the party moved toward the door, where adieus were spoken, then mounted and rode away.

How Flies Walk on Window Panes.

The microscope reveals the neat contrivance which enables a fly to walk up a window pane or defy the laws of gravity by gliding along, back downward, on the ceiling. The magnifier shows the foot to be made up of two pads covered with fine, short hair; each pad having a hook above it. Behind each pad is a bag filled with a sticky liquid which oozes out whenever the fly puts his foot down. The amount which is pressed out of each foot is very small indeed, but taken all together it is amply sufficient to hold the insect in any position he chooses.—St. Louis Republic.

Nero's Appearance.

In his youth Nero was remarkably handsome, but early in manhood his habits of dissipation made him exceedingly corpulent. To judge from his medals and the descriptions left of him he must have weighed over 200 pounds. His features were regular, but his eyes were so protuberant as to be almost a deformity, and he was nearsighted, so much so that he could not recognize his acquaintances across the street.

Cautious Turkey.

The Russian government has asked permission of Turkey to make measurements of the sea of Marmora in order to determine scientifically what changes have occurred through the late earthquakes. The porte has given the desired permission, but the Russian man-of-war will be escorted by a Turkish vessel, and a Turkish naval officer will assist at all the scientific examinations of the coast.

WESLEY'S ROMANCE.

THE SWEET, SAD LOVE STORY OF THE GREAT PREACHER.

The Struggle Between His Affection For Sophia Causton and What He Believed to Be His Religious Duty—Partisans of Each Side Took Active Parts.

It was at the house of Governor Oglethorpe in the early days of Georgia, says a writer in the Boston Herald.

In the evening Sophia Causton was there, and the general had her sing for them some old love songs of England and Scotland, and snatches from the operas of London. She danced, too, and recited, and completely overwhelmed the pious youth with her beauty and accomplishments.

That night, under the palmetto trees near the governor's house, with the dark eyed, handsome girl beside him, and with her entrancing voice in his ears, with the Cypress wine and Grimaldi's decoction hot in his blood, John Wesley became aware that he loved her.

The revelation was a shock to him, for he had been preaching celibacy since he was a small boy. He had felt himself wedded to the church, to his great faith and mission in life. The strife of spirit threw him into a fever.

Miss Causton did the only thing that a young lady in her state of mind could do. She nursed him, and he allowed her to. This circumstance was sufficient proof to their friends that marriage was certain. If more proof was needed, he raved of her in his delirium. Miss Causton brought her aunt to hear him, and between them they fancied him quite decided to marry Sophia. He asked her many times if she would or could marry him, "and if he should indeed marry her." He went through with the marriage ceremony of the Church of England, for the benefit of imaginary couples who stood at his bedside.

After his recovery Wesley's friends came to congratulate him on his engagement. But ever since his miraculous rescue from fire in his childhood he had been convinced that he had been singled out by his Maker for some special purpose, and now he was prostrating himself before an earthly idol and forgetting his mission.

Alarmed for his soul, he rushed to the bishop and the Moravian missionaries for advice. They had the same hard, unrelenting convictions which tormented Wesley, and they advised him to give up his idol and turn to his God. Wesley knew not what to do. He wandered in the forests praying aloud for light as to his walk before God. He knelt under the blooming grape vines, and shielded by the long, gray moss from any living eye sought wisdom and comfort.

That night he asked advice a second time of the elder.

"We have considered your case," said the bishop. "Will you abide by our decision?"

"I will abide by your decision."

Then the bishop said, "We advise you to proceed no further in this matter."

"So be it!" said Wesley, and that was the end.

Poor Sophia was heartbroken. Her relatives were incensed and compelled her to marry a Mr. Williamson, though she begged Wesley to intercede in her behalf. Even after she was married she wrote to Wesley and cast pitiful glances at him until in his desperation one day he forbade her to attend holy communion. He explained this afternoon on technical grounds, but the tide had turned and the people of Georgia were against him. A charge of slander was instituted, but the assailants, knowing that they had small chance of success, delayed the trial from week to week until life in Georgia became unbearable. He made arrangements to leave the colony. But even in this the Caustons thwarted him. He was forbidden to leave the province.

He never went out that Sophia did not pass and repass him several times, and often she was known to look in upon him when he was at prayer in his own house.

During all these trials he continued to conduct his parish as usual, although he was a sort of prisoner at large. At 6 o'clock one evening the little flock gathered in the church for prayers. Wesley led as usual. Delamotte was there with the friends who still remained loyal. After the service Wesley was seen to return to his home. But the faithful Delamotte had planned an escape from this slow torture. Three faithful friends led the young clerical through the darkness to the pier. There an Indian skiff bore him down the river. A sailing vessel was in waiting, and soon John Wesley was leaving the land of his love forever.

Mrs. Shakespeare.

Shakespeare, who was born in April, 1564, was in his nineteenth year when he married, writes Dr. William J. Rolfe in The Ladies' Home Journal. Of Anne's birth or baptism we have no record, but the inscription on her grave informs us that she was 67 years old when she died, Aug. 6, 1623. She must therefore have been at least 26 at the time of her marriage. Some biographers have taken the ground that the "smart" young woman of 26 entrapped the boy of 18 into this match, which, from a worldly point of view, was so imprudent, but I fancy that the boy himself would have been disinclined to urge any such excuse for his conduct.

Tracks of Extinct Birds.

Several tracks of an extinct species of gigantic bird have at different times been found in the stone quarry at Holyoke, Mass. The last set discovered shows that the bird had a foot 11 inches long, armed with three nails or claws to each foot. The tracks average 4 feet 10 inches apart, and 11 of them have been revealed to view. They are perfect, even the toe nails being plainly distinct.—St. Louis Republic.

A GRAND ENTERPRISE

ITS ORIGIN AND SUCCESSFUL DEVELOPMENT DUE TO A WOMAN.

A Residence For Needy Professional Workers That Is Not a Charity—Miss M. A. Fisher and the Home Hotel—Its Founding, Policy and Guests.

A modest little card tacked to the front door of a handsome brick house in St. Ann's avenue, near One Hundred and Thirty-fifth street, announces to the world the existence of a hotel which embodies a woman's idea and efforts in lightening the burdens of other persons. Among refined and congenial surroundings the guest of this house, which is called the Home hotel and is open to both men and women, may have a cozy room and good fare for very little more money a week than an orchestra chair at a theater costs, and if she happens to be straggling against fate with an empty pocketbook she may have the same accommodations for nothing at all until fortune smiles.

Yet the hotel is not a charitable institution. A more valuable possession than money is required to give you entry there. You must have brains, and they must be brains, moreover, that are refined and polished by education and culture, for the hotel is conducted for authors, musicians, teachers and members of other professions who find temporary difficulty in wringing dollars from an unappreciative world, and for those who are incapacitated by age or illness from earning money.

A courtly old gentleman opens the front door to the needy brainworker who comes for the first time and bows the caller into the parlor, with the information that Miss —— will attend her presently. A very pleasant first impression of the hotel is received while waiting here. These parlors seem instinct with informality and sociability. The plain, substantial furniture; the piano, with its loose and apparently oft turned sheets of music; the well thumbed magazines and books, the portraits and engravings, combine to remind one of an old fashioned country house where hospitality and simplicity dwell and ostentation has no place.

The door opens softly, and a sweet faced woman enters. In a manner full of charm and tact she asks the necessary questions, and the caller is invited to come again on a certain day. Meanwhile her credentials are carefully investigated. If the result is satisfactory, a warm welcome awaits her on her second visit, and she becomes one of the little company whose ambitions in art or literature have not yet been realized or are worn out with the efforts of a lifetime. She pays whatever she can afford, from $1 a week to $7, and sympathy and material aid, where possible, are extended to her in her work.

Professional persons over 65 may become life guests by the payment of $300, which is raised by relatives or a church society, and sometimes by the patrons of the home. There are at present about 50 guests in the four connecting houses, to which the hotel has been enlarged. They are not all without means. A number pay full rates for board, and live in the hotel because of its society of clever, interesting persons and the atmosphere of refinement and homeliness.

The founder of the hotel and the president of the association, which includes among its members many prominent New York men and women, is Miss Mary A. Fisher.

"Our hotel," as was told to a reporter in a visit there, "occupies a field of usefulness all its own. There are authors' and actors' funds and charitable organizations, but we do not feel that we are conducting a charity. We are simply providing a home for brainworkers who have earned a rest, and for ambitious educated persons whose present means might not otherwise enable them to live amid congenial surroundings.

"A beautiful house in Hampstead, England, where governesses, grown old in their profession, could live out their lives in peace and restfulness, suggested the idea of the hotel to me. And afterward, here in New York, it came to me again with striking force. In a wretched room in a tenement house I found an aged musician and composer in his last illness.

"'Don't send me to an almshouse,' he begged. 'Let me die here. I am used to the cold, and those old bundles of music,' pointing with a trembling finger to the rude shelf above his bed filled with his manuscript music, 'are companions. They are like children to me.'

"On another occasion a friend wanted some writing done, and a publisher recommended an author and his wife who wrote for a livelihood. In East Eleventh street, amid almost squalid surroundings, we found these cultured people. They were called successful writers, their special field being biography and history, but they accepted the work eagerly, on any terms. We asked no questions. None were necessary. The pinched look on their child's face and their own pallor told the story of privation.

"These and similar experiences opened my eyes to the great need of a hotel like ours, and after many discouragements I started. It was eight years ago—years that have given me a wealth of experience and shown me some of the strangest and most pathetic phases of human nature. Around my table have gathered geniuses who were half mad, confused by the luxuriance of their own ideas; inglorious Miltons who were perhaps too far ahead of their times to gain recognition; young persons of ardent ambitions, which have since been realized in some cases; noble men and women who lacked but one qualification—that of getting money. Among the saddest cases are the widows who after years of comfort and affluence are thrown on their own resources without training or talent which will avail them in self support."—New York Times.

My Wife is Nervous

Says many a man and too often he is inclined to blame the poor, tired woman who cannot eat or sleep, whose whole life is filled with misery because her blood has become impoverished and her nervous system exhausted. She needs a building up medicine like Hood's Sarsaparilla. A few bottles will enrich and vitalize her blood, tone and strengthen her digestive organs, give her a good appetite, enable her to sleep soundly, banish her nervousness and bring back her smiles. Mr. J. W. Roberson, of Greenfield, Tenn., says: "My wife began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla about three months ago and she is now taking her third bottle. She has been in poor health for fifteen years. Hood's Sarsaparilla is doing her more good than any other medicine she has ever taken. Her appetite is better, she looks better and there has been improvement every way."

Warren Register:—Mayor Lamberson and Judge Grindeland attended the mass railroad convention held at Drayton last Wednesday. The convention was a large and enthusiastic one, and the delegates present by a resolution unanimously adopted expressed their unbounded confidence in Mr. Hines, and pledged him their united assistance and support in the work of building and equipping the new railroad. In his speech before the convention Judge Grindeland informed the delegates that Warren is prepared to give free the right of way and grade for a distance of twenty miles. The number of directors of the company was increased by the addition of eight of the stockholders, Henry Beardmore, of Polk county becoming one of the new directors.

In his department of "The Progress of the World" for May the editor of the Review of Reviews sums up the significant events of the month preceding. Prominent topics thus treated are the income tax decision, the Chicago election and the triumph of civil service reform, the Cuban revolt, the Venezuelan boundary issue, and the British claim in Nicaragua. The editor makes some interesting comments on recent progress in the South, notably illustrated by railroad and other industrial development in Florida, the improvement of various southern harbors the enforcement of the South Carolina liquor law, and other encouraging signs. At the same time the low prices of sugar and cotton are discussed in their relation to the prevailing feeling of unrest among the agriculturists of the Gulf states.

The World's Drinks.

Beer was the universal drink of the English until the introduction of tea and coffee about 1650. Siberians prepare an intoxicating beverage from mushrooms. In Sweden an apetezer is made from the common fennel. The word brandy is from the Dutch "Brandwifn"—burnt wine. Maraschino is distilled from cherries, the fruit and seeds being crushed together. Absinthe is an alcoholate composed of anise, coriander and fennel, flavored with wormwood and colored with indigo and sulphate of copper. Curacoa is made by digesting orange peel in sweetened spirits and flavoring with cinnamon, cloves or mace. Kischenwasser is distilled from cherries. Vermuth is composed of white wine, angelica, absintbe, and aromatic herbs. Kimmel is brandy sweetened and flavored with coriander and caraway seeds. Tea has been grown and used in the East for ages, from India to Japan. Coffee was introduced into Persia in 872, and into Europe in 1615. Cocoa was sent to Europe from Mexico by the Spaniard in 1520. Eating is more important than drinking, and especially on a journey. When traveling, you should take the Burlington, whose dining cars offer all the delicacies of the season, exquisitely prepared, and are operated on the cafe plan, so that the patron pays only for his own selection. Many other advantages and attractions of the Burlington Route can be learned by addressing W. J. C. Kenyou, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul, Minn.

The North American Review for May opens with an attractive paper on "The Preacher and his Province," by his Eminence, CARDINAL GIBBONS, who maintains that the closer the intimacy of a minister of religion with the special needs of his parishioners, whatever their class may be, the more effective will be his ministrations to them. CHARLES DICKENS, the younger, in the first part of an article entitled "Glimpses of Charles Dickens," gives a graphic and amusing description of the great novelist's fondness for private theatricals, and Hon. WILLIAM T. HARRIS, United States Commissioner of Education, writes interestingly upon "Elementary Education." A highly suggestive contribution by Prof. GOLDWIN SMITH, entitled "Our Situation as Viewed from Without," will ensure wide attention, while, in "Russia and England," Prof. ARMINIUS VAMBERY discusses the rivalry existing between the two countries and the chance of a permanent cessation of their hostilities in Asia. E. L. GODKIN, editor of the Evening Post, New York, deals with the topic of "Diplomacy and the Newspaper," deploring the spirit of jingoism exhibited by certain American papers. "The Progress of Meteorology" is described in an instructive article by Prof. FRANK WALDO, of Princeton University. Two most timely contributions on "The Income Tax" are also given, the Hon. George S. Boutwell, ex-Secretary of the Treasury, treating of "The Decision of the Supreme Court," and "The Spirit of the Tax" being commented upon by a well-knowd economic writer, who prefers, in this instance, to be known as "Plain-Speaker." In the "Personal History of the Second Empire" ALBERT D. VANDAM deals principally with "The Alliance with England," and the Japanese Minister at Washington considers in a thoughtful paper "The future of Japan." Other topics discussed are "Judaism and Unitarianism," by the Rev. MAURICE H. HARRIS; "A Last Word on an Old Subject," by One of the Naggers; "The Latest News of Mars," by Prof. EDWARD S. HOLDEN; and "Morality in College Athletics," by OLIVER S. JONES.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

From our Regular Correspondent.

WASHINGTON, May 3, 1895.

Nothing in the future is more certain than that the administration will be given a lively hauling over the coals by Congress for its policy in the Nicaragua affair. It is doubtful whether anybody, except Mr. Cleveland and the members of the cabinet, has seen the official correspondence, but it is known that in the beginning of the dispute between Nicaragua and England, Secretary Gresham gave Dr. Guzman, the Nicaraguan minister to understand, if he did not tell him explicitly, that the administration thought Nicaragua right and would support it, if necessary. And there are reasons for the belief that it was the intention of the administration to stand by Nicaragua until Ambassador Bayard whose partiality for the English is well known, made certain representations in his dispatches from London which caused the administration to turn a somersault and agree to allow England to do what she pleased with Nicaragua. It cannot be stated to a certainty what those representations were, but suspicion strongly points to their having a connection with a hobby which Mr. Bayard has had for a long time—that England and the United States shall jointly control the Nicaragua ship canal. Whatever may be the views of Mr. Bayard and the administration as to such a partnership it is certain that Congress will never agree to it. This isn't a matter of party politics, but of Americanism, and when the matter comes up in Congress, as it will early in the next session, many of the ablest democrats in Congress, including Senator Morgan, present chairman of the Senate committee on Foreign Relations, will be found standing shoulder to shoulder with the republicans in advocacy of a declaration so strong that it will convince the world that the United States is determined to dominate this continent without the formation of any copartnership with England or any other European nation.

Senator Stewart, of Nevada, made public an open letter to Mr. Cleveland this week, which contains some fine examples of a sarcastic style of writing. For instance: "The joint success of yourself and Lord Kimberly, in planting the British flag and extending British rule over Nicaragua is admired and applauded by every loyal subject to the queen, and will secure for you the love and respect of all true Englishmen. Your great and magnanimous nature will not be disturbed by the unreasonable complaints of any of your own countrymen, who continue to cling to the narrow and unreasonable prejudices, which the descendants of the rebels of 1776 still entertain against that great and good government, which is still willing to protect us, notwithstanding the ill will and ingratitude of our deluded ancestors. Your exalted position enables you to see the great advantage of a cordon of British naval stations guarding our exposed seaports on the two oceans, and the great security and commercial advantages the Nicaragua canal will afford under British jurisdiction. Your clear vision spans the continent and extends to the far-off islands of the Pacific, and you fully comprehend the complete protection that the navy of Great Britain, with headquarters at Honolulu, would be to the Pacific coast." Following is the closing paragraph: "Cease to be astonished at the unreasonable opposition of the senate to your beneficent policy and continue to treat with contempt the vile insinuations of improper motives in discounting bonds to the Rothschilds to secure protection and prosperity for our beloved country. Keep an eye single to the glory and renown and the imperishable name you will leave to posterity by achieving a union of 125,000,000 of English speaking people under the benign and unselfish rule of the British Crown."

Hon. Theodore Roosevelt, who has resigned as U. S. civil service commissioner to become a police commissioner of the city of New York, says of his new duties: "I shall act solely with a view to the well-being of the city and the interests of the service and shall take account only of the efficiency, honesty and record of the men. Neither in making appointments nor removals shall I pay any heed to the political or religious affiliations of any one. Outside of the position of police commissioner I remain as I have always been, a strong republican." Mr. Roosevelt will leave Washington next week.

Representative McCleary, of Minnesota, is in Washington on business for his constituents. He says of the political situation in his state: "The Democrats are in a hopeless minority in our state, and realizing that are trying to see if they cannot utilize the old scheme of 'divide and conquer,' by getting the Republicans split into hostile factions on the silver question. It is a cunning plan but I don't think the Republicans are going to be silly enough to fall into the trap."

What Intense Americanism Means.

The medium through which the newspaper acts most effectively on the enthusiastic temperament is what is known as "True Americanism, or "Thorough Americanism." or better than all, "Intense Americanism." I have studied these phrases a good deal with a view of finding out their exact meaning, but have not been successful in ever getting any exact definition of them from any one who used them in good faith. As a rule, one's merely asking for the meaning of them is taken as a sign of a spirit of ridicule or mockery, which makes real explanation of them difficult, or impossible. Consequently an earnest seeker after the truth is compelled—at least such has been my experience—to rely on the context, or on surrounding circumstances, or on collateral remarks, in trying to discover what they really mean who say they are "Intense Americans." I used at one time to suppose that an intense or good American, was a person who was content with his country just as it is, its laws, religion, manners and morals; who was, in spite of its defects, reasonably proud of it, and not disturbed by the judgments passed on it by hostile foreign observers. But it soon became apparent to me that the phrase meant much more than this. I found it did not stand for any piece of American political philosophy. It did not mean simply faith in any particular set of the ideas which are not unnaturally supposed to animate American institutions, such as the equality of man, or the perfectibility of the race, or the continuity of progress, or every man's natural fitness for office, or the certainty of American good luck. All these are the joint property of many nations, part of the common inheritance of the human race with which it tries to make tolerable its lot on earth. Nor does "intense Americanism" mean glory in the prospect of American growth in wealth and population and revenue, potentially for military purposes, or consciousness of the fact that, if we chose to try, we could "whip creation." It means, as well as I have been able to make out, and after approaching the matter from every side, and applying to it every test I can think of, simple readiness to take offense. An "intense American" is constantly on the lookout for somebody who either expresses, or implies by his looks or manner, doubts of the ability of the United States to thrash other nations; or who fails to acknowledge the right of the United States to occupy such territories, canals, isthmuses or peninsulas, as they may think it desirable to have, or who speaks disrespectfully of the Monroe doctrine, or who doubts the need of a large navy, or who admires European society, or who likes to go to Europe, or who fails, in case he has to go, to make comparisons unfavorable to Europe.—From "Diplomacy and the Newspaper," by E. L. Godkin in North American Review for May.

Last Sunday was "Patriot's Day" at the Congregational church and Rev. Herman P. Fisher took as his text, "Spare the people, O Lord, and give not thine heritage to reproach." Joel 2:17.

In the cabin of the Mayflower was drawn up the first constitution of American liberty, beginning with the memorable words, "In the name of God, Amen." Since the day of Minnesota's admission into the Union, here interests have been those of the United States, and those of the United States have been hers.

Today we are gathered in the house of God, not as individuals, or as the people of a town, or as the people of a State; but as representatives and citizens of a great Republic, of which ourselves, our city, our state, should be, and we trust are, vital constructive factors.

In no nation is the relation of the citizen to the state, and the state to the Republic, so vital as in ours. Stability here will never rest on arbitrary power, or upon custom, or upon royalty: it must rest upon the eternal principles of justice and right. But these must be understood, not by the few, but by the many. Our country has many dangers. Political equality is no panacea. In itself it gives no security. We often hear the words, "Vox populi vox Dei," the voice of the people is the voice of God. Ah! But what kind of people? Open your histories. Do they not say that absolute sovereignty is more stable than a popular government unless the people are intelligent and virtuous?

Look at France! Since the rise of constitutional rule in that country the French government has been three times overthrown by mobs (In 1792, 1830 and 1848.) Three times by the nation's own armies. (In 1797 1799 and 1851.) Three times by foreign invasion; but that invasion was due to the French themselves. (In 1814, 1815 and 1870.)

Take Spain. Since 1833 she has had five or six imposter rulers, five presidents, three kings and two queens. Between 1812 and 1874 she suffered no less than 38 military revolutions, which resulted in changing the constitution.

Germany and Italy tell nearly the same story. Almost every one of the German states has repeatedly altered its constitution since the date of Waterloo. In '48 every week brought a new constitution.

How is it with South American republics? Take a typical one, the Bolivian republic. Of her fourteen presidents, twelve have been murdered or banished.

But enough—I cite these facts of history as reminders that popular government, or political equality, of itself brings no stability or character to a nation. There must be intelligence to know what is right, and virtue to do it, or political equality is a mere sounding brass or tinkling cymbal.

Another significant consideration in its relation to the safety of our State and republic is the curse of the whisky shop. Out of 62,500,000 people, 2,800,000 are practically drunkards. Every year 120,000 fill drunkards graves. Our country's whisky and beer bill for last year was about one thousand million dollars. The tobacco bill for the same period was more than half that sum. Who paid that? The rich and those who have comfortable salaries? Yes, three-fourteenths of it! But who paid the other eleven-fourteenths? The workingman! While these extravagant curses exist, and are countenanced by workingmen, we shall have labor problems, and prison problems and court problems in abundance.

A third vital fact of our time, and in our state, is the perversion of the young. Modern life has given an undeserved prominence to the individual. We hear a great deal about personal liberty; very little about personal responsibility. Much about rights; little about duties. Much about what the church ought to do for the community; little about what the people of a community ought to do for the church. Much about what parents ought to do for their children; little about what children owe their parents. Much about what teachers are to do for pupils; little about what pupils are to do for teachers. We hear much about "Young America." Oh! for one hour of honest, true, brave, manly, christian America!

A final thought which we do well to consider is the fearful lack of conscience. When we speak of up and down, square business integrity, we are speaking of a rare product. The way some men make promises to God and man, without any intention, apparently, of fulfilling them, is little less than shocking. If ever there was a time when we needed convictions it is to-day, "I ought," I ought." Nothing can take the place of that. Absolute and changeless obligation to perform known duty, is apparently something not understood, either to young or old.

As a people our dangers lie along the line of forgetting God. With such forgetfulness comes speedy demoralization of public conscience. Let God be forgotten, the bible neglected, the Lord's day trifled with, the church slighted; the grog shops, gambling dens and brothels winked at, and the time may soon come when governor's proclamations, patriotic addresses, and the Stars and Stripes will have little meaning.

Blood Poison

THE BANE OF HUMAN LIFE,

Driven Out of the System by the Use of

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

"For five years, I was a great sufferer from a most persistent blood disease, none of the various medicines I took being of any help whatever. Hoping that change of climate would benefit me, I went to Cuba, to Florida, and then to Saratoga Springs, where I remained some time drinking the waters. But all was no use. At last, being advised by several friends to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla, I began taking it, and very soon favorable results were manifest. To-day I consider myself a perfectly healthy man, with a good appetite and not the least trace of my former complaint. To all my friends, and especially young men like myself, I recommend Ayer's Sarsaparilla, if in need of a perfectly reliable blood-purifier."—JOSE A. I have for some time been a sufferer from a severe blood trouble, for which I took many remedies that did me no good. I have now taken four bottles of S.S.S. with the most wonderful results. Very high winds prevailed on Friday night and for a time loose articles flew about the streets in a lively manner. In fact everything that was not nailed solid got a move on itself and traveled about promiscuously. A number of trees were blown down, one at the residence of the late S. L. Dobson crashing across the sidewalk but fortunately missing the house. As one citizen remarked "things looked pretty rocky for awhile."

Ben Clements advertised that on Saturday evening no one but ladies would be admitted to his candy store and each lady would receive a present of a package of nice fresh candy. Well the first result was that the store was packed full of ladies till a late hour and the next result—well talk about a caucus or a convention of men to create a litter! If there was anything from a hair pin to a shoe-string that went home with its owner the evening before we can't guess what it was judging from the various and sundry things that had the floor the next morning.

A. A. White, who was formerly a prominent citizen of Moorhead, but who is now a resident of St. Paul, was in the city on Thursday to look up the taxes on his East Grand Forks property. Mr. White was a soldier in his youth, and takes a great interest in G. A. R. matters and when we mentioned to him that our post was trying to buy and fix up a home of its own, he said he would chip in on that deal himself and told us to draw on him, if we perfected our plans. This is an example of patriotism that some of our own well-to-do citizens might well follow. The new G. A. R. hall will be a credit to our city and is deserving of a little aid.

Last week the JOURNAL said that Mrs. Rose had taken steps to adopt little Hattie Flanders and so she did, but later on a Mrs. Bray, from Dakota, appeared upon the scene and claimed the child by right of being the only original mother of it. Mrs. R. declined to give up the child and the music was about to strike up by the full band, when E. O. Flanders appeared upon the scene and the deal changed. It seems that some years ago he legally adopted the child and the mother could not regain possession without his consent, which he declined to give. Mrs. Bray departed to her home on Saturday, leaving Flanders in possession of the child, which will stay with Mrs. Rose for a while, at least.

PROFIT IN GUINEAS.

They Must Have Unlimited Range—Hatching and Rearing.

A flock of guineas are about the most profitable poultry that can be kept if they are where they can have unlimited range. The common or pearl guineas are just as good as the albino or white variety, but when cooked their flesh is not so white. In the morning when they are let out of the poultry house they often do not stop longer than to pick up a little of the grain given to the flock, and then they wander off to the fields in search of weed seeds and bugs, which they like better than anything that can be given them. They never grow tame, like hens, but the white ones are much more domestic in their habits than the colored ones are.

The white guinea hens lay in the nests with the hens during the whole fore part of the season, but when they get ready to sit they will steal off and hide their nests and hatch their eggs if they are not watched. Do not let them hatch their eggs, as they are most careless mothers, and a guinea hen that will raise two chicks out of 20 hatched will be doing pretty well. Hatch them under hens and let the hens raise them, and they develop a great affection for their foster mother, refusing to be weaned during the whole season, but following her faithfully whenever she is out of the poultry house. When first hatched, guineas are exceedingly wild, and unless confined in a place where they cannot get away they will wander off and perish, leaving the nest very frequently within two or three hours after they are hatched.

Guinea eggs do not take well in market because of their small size, but for house use they are as good as any, and they are produced in such abundance and at such little cost that any one can afford to keep a flock of these fowls for the eggs for house use. Besides being a cheerful bird, they are as good as a watchdog to tell when there are strangers around. They detect a stranger as soon as he comes near and set up their shrill cries. They also serve to frighten off hawks, as they are sure to raise a clamor if one comes in sight.

POULTRY EXCLUSIVELY.

Good Business For Unskilled Labor, but It Requires Capital.

There is no reason why a fair income may not be derived in the neighborhood of any town or city in the poultry business. It requires some capital to begin with, but less than almost any other undertaking, and the returns begin almost at once. Let any poultryman be particular that every egg he takes to market is perfectly fresh, and that his fowls are properly fattened, and it will not be long before he can sell all he can produce at an advance on the going price. The poultry business is not one for a lazy man to undertake, for it is a business of infinite detail and carefulness. The man who undertakes to care for a thousand hens will have but little time to play.

A thousand hens and the buildings to keep them in can be got in shape for business for $1,000, and these hens if properly cared for and the marketing intelligently attended to will bring their owner $1 for each hen above the expense of keeping them. This has been done time and again, and in favorable situations even better results are being obtained by more than one breeder. There is no business that will make such return from practically unskilled labor. The poultry business is on a firm basis and can be very greatly enlarged without being overdone.

Notes About Pigeons.

But of all the birds that may be called domestic the pigeon holds the first place. The dove that went forth from the ark to search the state of the earth has developed many species during the ages. No bird can be "crossed" more easily than the pigeon. These birds are more carefully classified than any others, and another thing in their favor is that they have really more intelligence than any of the feathered flock. Pigeons are affectionate creatures and are always ready to show their appreciation of any kindness shown to them. The "carrier" class of pigeons has not many varieties, but they have quite a literature of their own. A thoroughbred pigeon can wing it at the rate of about 30 miles an hour. That is the average rate of speed, but in the Franco-German war, during the siege of Paris, that was frequently exceeded.

Leghorns Are Wild.

Leghorns are naturally wild, but the wild nature can be somewhat subdued if care is taken. Now the winter months are here, and we have many days when it is unfit for the fowls to be outdoors, and if your scratching shed is so arranged that they can go from their roosting pen to it, you can facilitate matters considerably by having a muslin front put to the shed, so that the fowls cannot go out. Then at feeding time quietly move among them, and thus gradually have them become accustomed to you.

SELECTING LAYERS.

The Hen That Sings and Has a Large Comb.

It is true that there is no infallible rule for selecting the best layers in a flock of hens, says C. C. Gale in an exchange, but there are a few indications that show which hens are probably the best layers. I say probably, for the rule does not always work, and exceptions to it are not rare. It will be understood by this that I only give these rules from observation among my own flocks and from my own experience.

The most active hens in a flock are usually the best layers. The hen who stands ready to run out of the house in the morning as soon as the door opens and flies at the feed as if she were starving is the one that will produce the most eggs commonly. Such a hen will not stand around in the sun after eating her morning feed, but will be seen far away from the house foraging for food. She is the hen that sings as she goes about and is the one who will find her way into the garden if she can possibly get there.

A large comb is a sign of a good layer. By this I mean a large comb for the breed she belongs to. Almost invariably the Leghorn hen that has a large, thin comb that drops down over one eye will be found to be a good layer. The comb of a good layer is of bright red all the time she is laying, and as soon as it becomes pale or dark colored you may be sure she has ceased to lay.

The good layer is rather narrow across the shoulder and wide in the rump, with the rear of her body deep and low. Her feathers are glossy and her eye bright, and she is full of life and action. If a hen possesses all these indications, there is not much danger in picking her for a breeder, as she will almost always be prolific, and eggs produced by her will be fertile and the chicks strong and vigorous.

POULTRY POINTS.

Light and Air—Roosts and Beds of Straw In Winter.

A writer in The Poultry Herald says that he put 50 chickens in a small greenhouse which he had used for growing lettuce, etc., and 50 in a house built on purpose to use as a brooding house. All were from one hatch and alike in all respects. At the end of three months he had 49 chickens in the greenhouse and sold them all at $1.25 a pair. In the brooding house he had 18 chickens and could only select three of them as fit to sell among the others. He gave the light and air credit for the difference and says that in a place where he could not grow edible lettuce, or where the plants grew tall, spindly and were not well colored, he should consider it folly to try to raise chickens.

The lack of sufficient light may be the great cause why many fail to succeed well in raising their chickens in a brooder.

The plan of removing the roosts from the henhouse during the winter and giving the fowl beds of straw in which to sit upon the ground seems to be finding favor with some writers upon poultry subjects. We admit the greater warmth, but not the claim of purer air there, which is made by those who advocate this plan. With us the cold air does not come in near the ground, but passes in near the top, drops down to the floor by its greater weight, and as it becomes warmed rises again to pass out at the other end.

The purer air is usually a little above the floor, the floor being continually giving off some impurity from the droppings, but the greatest objections to the straw plan is that in a section where straw is not plenty many would not change it often enough or use enough of it. Indeed we doubt if those who had straw to burn would take sufficient care in changing it. We shall keep to our roosts about two feet from the floor.

Two Eggs a Day.

It is not an uncommon feat for a hen to lay two eggs a day, especially the Leghorns and other laying breeds, when forced. I once knew a game hen, says an experienced poultryman, to make a regular practice of laying two eggs a day about two days in the week, and, what is more, she would lay one egg the day before and the day after. One week she laid ten eggs. She was often shut up alone, so that no other hens could get near her, and at night two eggs were in her nest. But the most remarkable record that ever came to my notice was of a coop of five silver penciled Hamburg hens. They were kept by a friend who worked in a butcher's shop, and I have no reason to doubt his word. The hens had all the fresh meat they would eat, and the way they shelled out the eggs was a caution. On many days they would lay ten eggs, going on the nest early in the morning and late in the afternoon, but upon the day following they would not lay more than two or three, if any. Fresh meat and plenty of exercise were the things which caused such an abundant production of eggs.

Poultry Plants.
